Apologise for brute force: Capt to Khattar

Won't take his calls till he does so: Punjab CM

CHANDIGARH, NOVEMBER 28

Reacting to his Haryana counterpart ML Khattar's "sponsored stir" charge, Punjab CM Capt Amarinder Singh today said: "Some people are blind not to see the lakhs of farmers trying to enter Delhi from across the country." On Khattar's charge that he had tried calling him a number of times but in vain, Captain said:

"Khattar is lying that I did not respond to his calls. After Haryana's treatment of my farmers, I will not take his calls now. Unless he apologises and admits he has wronged the farmers of my state, I will not forgive him."

He urged the Centre to immediately hold talks with the kisan unions to defuse the situation "created by Haryana's attempts" to forcibly stop the farmers' march.

"I dialled his number a couple of times, but was told each time by Captain's staff that he was busy. He would earlier respond within an hour or so." His staff later released details of the calls made.

Post HC order, footballer Ali back in game

JAIPUR, NOVEMBER 28

Adampur-based footballer Anwar Ali (20), who was barred from the sport after being diagnosed with congenital heart condition, is back in the game. Ali is currently playing Himachal State League matches as part of Techtro Swades United Club.

Ali, who belongs to a family of Gujjars from Chumo village in Adampur, has represented India in several under-15, under-17 and under-19 tournaments.

In September, the All-India Football Federation (AIFF) had barred him from playing competitive football owing to his health condition. The footballer had taken the matter to the Delhi High Court. On October 20, the court allowed Ali to continue playing till the AIFF arrived at a final decision.

Contesting the ban, Ali had claimed that a doctor from the PGIMER, Chandigarh, had given him a go-ahead to play football.

An alumnus of Mohali's Minerva Academy, Ali said the AIFF's decision had snatched his livelihood as he was the sole bread earner of the family.

His father Razak Ali said: "Doctors have told us that Ali is in the low-risk category. He feels energetic and is doing well in his game. He Harjinder Bindu, state president of women wing of BKU (Ekta-Ugrahan), said thousands of women activists were in high spirits and geared up for indefinite protest in Delhi. He appealed to women in Punjab that they should continue the protests against corporate houses and BJP leaders in the state. Indefinite protests outside the houses of BJP leaders in Punjab have been continuing for more than a month. The Prime Minister and his colleagues have repeatedly maintained that the assured marketing of farmers' produce at the MSP will be continued under all circumstances. That being so, there should be no objection to nor problem in giving a legal shape to the govern-

Show restraint while invoking contempt provisions, says HC

SAURABH MALIK
 TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

CHANDIGARH, NOVEMBER 28

In a significant judgment liable to change the way contempt proceedings are initiated by the lower judiciary, the Punjab and Haryana High Court has ruled that due caution and judicial restraint are required to be exercised while invoking the penal provisions.

The assertion came as Justice Arun Monga rapped a judicial magistrate, first class, for making observations that "flew in the face of the record" in a case where a contempt notice was issued to a Punjab-cadre IPS officer against the provisions of law.

"The penal provisions of the Contempt of Courts Act have to be invoked with due circumspection, judicial restraint and sparingly. Their undue and indiscriminate use, particularly against public officers in connection with their official work, tends to unnecessarily embarrass, humiliate and demoralise them, thereby adversely affecting the discharge of their public functions without enhancing the dignity, respect and image of the courts," Justice Monga asserted.

AFFECTS DISCHARGE OF DUTIES

66 The penal provisions of the Contempt of Courts Act have to be invoked with due circumspection, judicial restraint and sparingly. Their undue use adversely affects public workers. Justice Arun Monga

The matter was brought to Justice Monga's notice after IPS officer Nilambari Vijay Jagdale, through counsel Gautam Dutt, sought the setting aside of the magistrate's order holding that she had committed civil contempt. Jagdale was asked to personally look into a case where supplementary challan was not presented despite eight years of FIR registration. But nothing happened.

The magistrate referred the matter to the High Court for action for violation of his orders. Jagdale is currently posted as AIG, cyber crime-cum-director, Digital Investigation Training and Analysis Centre and State Crime Records Bureau of the Punjab Police.

Justice Monga asserted the magistrate observed contrary to record that reply to the contempt petition was by the investigating officer, who was not facing contempt and was not even competent to file the reply.

Justice Monga added the magistrate was not justified in commenting adversely against the petitioner's conduct for not personally appearing and not filing separate reply in individual capacity as the impugned order did not reveal any such direction.

Referring to a High Court order, Justice Monga asserted it showed implicit satisfaction with explanation for delay in supplementary challan. Judicial discipline and propriety required the magistrate to give due weightage and respect to the High Court's view. But he ignored it by making observations contrary to the record.

Setting aside the order, Justice Monga added even if significant part of delay was assumed to be attributable to the investigating officer, it would not be more than an administrative/superintendence lapse on petitioner's part and she could not have been hauled up for contempt.

A large number of residents of the area attended the cremation. There was a great resentment among the family and villagers as the martyr was not given state honours during the cremation. The state honour is given by the Army by reversing the arms. However, Army officials, Deputy Commissioner Kulwant Singh, Khadoor Sahib SDM Rohit Gupta were among those who laid wreaths on the body.—OC

JHAJJAR, NOVEMBER 28

Thousands of farmers today camped at the Haryana-Delhi border at Tikri Kalan village. They blocked it by setting up barricades and placing their tractor-trailers on the Rohtak-Delhi highway in the presence of a heavy police posse.

A patch of over 3 km on the bypass in Bahadurgarh town was packed with vehicles of the protesters, who were reluctant to go to Burari instead of Ramlila Ground in the National Capital. Those who could not reach the border were resting in their vehicles and roaming on the highway.

"Come what may, we will not move ahead from Tikri border till the Centre does not allow us to go to Ramlila Ground. Everyone has the constitutional right to protest peacefully, but the Centre is trying to incite us. We will go back to Punjab only after the Centre revokes all three 'black' laws," Pragat Singh, FARMER LEADER

Meanwhile, Punjab Education and PWD Minister Vijay Inder Singh and Haryana Rajya Sabha MP Deepender Hooda also arrived at the Tikri border to support the Thousands of farmers on Saturday staged a dharna at Singhu border for the second day in a row. Farmers from Uttar Pradesh also joined the protest at Singhu border.

Meanwhile, various farmers' unions have decided to stay at the borders till their demands are not met. A 12-km-long queue of vehicles was witnessed on the NH-44 due to which the commuters had to face a tough time.

Activist Sant Gopal Das also reached at the border to extend his support to the farmers sitting on a dharna.

Rakesh Bains, state BKU spokesperson, said a meeting of the Kisan Sanyukt Morcha was held on Saturday and Balbir Singh Rajawal announced to stay put at the borders. Their next strategy would be decided after the next meeting on Sunday.

Meanwhile, BKU (Charuni) chief Gurnam Singh Charuni said the farmers had blocked the entry to Delhi on two borders and if their demand was not met, they would shut all borders.

Besides, farmers from UP under the banner of the BKU (Asli) led by state chief Harpal Singh Balari also joined the protest on Saturday.

Chander Prakash Yadav, state vice-president, BKU (Asli) from Uttar Pradesh, said we were detained in a college-turned-temporary jail in Chandrawali of Bulandshahr by the BJP government for the past two days so we couldn't join the protest earlier.

YAMUNANAGAR, NOVEMBER 28

As many as 1,628 eucalyptus trees were allegedly stolen by 14 lease holders from 70 acres of panchayat land at Nadipar village of Sadhaura block in Yamunanagar district.

On the complaint of Block Development and Panchayat Officer of Sadhaura (additional charge) Dinesh Sharma, a case was registered against 14 lease holders under Section 379 (theft) at Sadhaura police station on November 25.

As per the FIR, Raj Kishan, Lal Chand, Mohinder, Rajesh, Suresh, Satish, Balak Ram, Satish, Shyam Ram, Pala Ram, Avinash, Sangat Singh, Om Prakash and Gurdev, all residents of Nadipar village, took the panchayat land of the village on lease for 2020-21.

The FIR further reads that when the matter came to light, the gram panchayat of the village passed a resolution on June 24 and informed the BDPO office, Sadhaura, in connection with this theft.

BDPO Dinesh Sharma said that sarpanch Data Ram had been suspended by Deputy Commissioner Mukul Kumar and an inquiry against the sarpanch was being done by the Bilaspur SDM in this connection.

Protest exposes chinks in JJP

SUSHIL MANAV

CHANDIGARH, NOVEMBER 28

The Haryana Government's response to 'Delhi Chalo' agitation of farmers has once again exposed the chinks within the JJP-BJP's alliance partner in Haryana.

JJP MLA Jogi Ram Sihag has hit out strongly at the coalition government for the way it has treated agitating farmers. Alarmed, the JJP has immediately swung into damage control exercise as Deputy CM Dushyant Chautala's younger brother Digvijay Chautala today described the way farmers were treated as "painful".

He appealed to the Centre to hold talks with farmers today instead of the scheduled meeting of December 3.

In hard-hitting criticism of

MLA slams govt for treating farmers badly

the state government, JJP MLA from Barwala Jogi Ram Sihag also demanded registration of criminal cases against the officers who ordered digging of highways to stop farmers from marching to Delhi.

"The Haryana Government has been treating farmers who are agitating for their rights as if they are terrorists. This is not only injustice, but also an act of atrocity on the innocent farmers," Sihag alleged.

He went on to add that the officers who got the highways dug were guilty of damaging public property and must be booked for their act.

Offered the post of chairman of Haryana Housing

Board, Sihag had refused to accept the post till the government amended the three controversial farm laws. Sihag's diatribe has come as a big embarrassment for the JJP which claims to champion the cause of farmers in the state. Meanwhile, Digvijay Chautala today released a video empathising with farmers from Haryana and Punjab, who are marching towards Delhi. "Whatever we have seen on television during the past two days has pained every single Indian."

He appealed to the Centre, Union Agriculture Minister and PM Narendra Modi to look into the farmers' issues.

Khattar lacks courage: Selja

Kumari Selja, HPCC chief, on today lambasted CM Manohar Lal Khattar over his claim that state farmers were not part of the struggle against the Centre's three farm laws.

In a statement, she alleged that Khattar did not have "enough courage to know the pain and suffering of the farmers of Haryana, raise their voice, put forward their agony and demands to the Centre because he fears his high command".

"That is why the CM is deliberately saying that Haryana farmers are not participating in this movement. The truth is that PM Narendra Modi is concerned about his capitalist friends and the CM is afraid of his high command. For this reason, the state farmers are protesting today," TNS

SHIMLA, NOVEMBER 28

In a bid to curb the surge in Covid cases, the state government today restricted attendance in all social, political and religious gatherings to 50. However, it gave partial relaxation of one hour in the night curfew imposed in four districts.

The important decisions were taken at a meeting chaired by Chief Minister Jai Ram Thakur here today. Health Minister Rajiv Saizal, Irrigation and Public Health Minister Mahender Singh and Urban Development Minister Suresh Bhardwaj, besides senior officials attended the meeting. A modification has been made in the timings of the night curfew in the four districts of Shimla, Mandi, Kangra and Kullu — night curfew will now be enforced from 9 pm to 6 am instead of earlier 8 pm to 6 am.

"Henceforth, not more than 50 persons will be allowed at any social gathering, whether indoors or outdoors, be it a wedding, a political rally or a religious congregation, as such gatherings have been found to be the biggest cause of Covid spread," said the Chief Minis-

He added that the limit of 50 persons would be applicable to any function whether indoors or outdoors. Earlier, the limit was 100 for indoor venues and 200 for outdoors.

Thakur said that even though government employees (Class III and IV) were being called to office on alternate days, its impact was still not very visible. "As such, we have decided that employees will come to office from Monday to Friday while they will work from home on Saturday so as to break the transmission chain on two days at the weekend," he said. As such, it would be five days duty at office and one-day work from home till December 31.

51% polling in 1st phase, Valley sees 40% turnout

Tribune News Service

NEW DELHI, NOVEMBER 28

In the first democratic process since it became a union territory (UT) last year, Jammu and Kashmir today witnessed peaceful polling in the first of the District Development Council (DDC) election with an average voter turnout of 51.76 per cent.

J&K Election Commissioner KK Sharma said the polling process passed off peacefully, except for a stray incident of stone-throwing in Kulgam, of which the police have taken cognisance. Out of 3.62 lakh electorates, 1.93 lakh were men while 1.79 lakh were women, he said. While the Jammu division registered 64.2 per cent polling, the Kashmir division saw 40.6 per cent turnout, Sharma said.

Reasi in the Jammu division recorded the highest polling, with 74.6 per cent turnout, followed by Rajouri (70.5 per cent), Poonch (68.69 per cent) and Samba (68.61 per cent). Similarly, Budgam in Kashmir saw the highest polling with 56.9 per cent turnout, followed by Kupwara (50.74 per cent), Ganderbal (48.60 per cent) and Shopian (42.5 per cent). Pulwama district in south Kashmir reported the lowest turnout (6.7 per cent).

COVID SAFETY NORMS THROWN TO THE WIND
Ganderbal: Covid guidelines were flouted at some polling stations in the Valley and excitement overtook precautions as enthusiastic voters jostled with each other to cast their ballot. From not maintaining adequate distance while standing in queues to basking in the lawns, the voters flouted the pandemic guidelines openly. Most of them were without masks. Though health officials were deployed at polling booths to check the temperature of the voters, sanitisers and masks were not available at several places. PTI

In the volatile areas of south Kashmir, where a low voter turnout was expected, Pulwama witnessed less than 7 per cent in the first phase, while Shopian, which witnesses highest number of counter-insurgency operations, recorded 42.58 per cent voter turnout.

The polling began at 7 am amid biting cold, but gained momentum as the day progressed, poll officials said. The election happens to be

EXIT POLL AFTER LAST PHASE, SAYS PANEL

Jammu: The State Election Commission (SEC) in Jammu and Kashmir on Saturday imposed restrictions on exit polls till the end of the eight-phase DDC election. An order to this effect was issued by State Election Commissioner KK Sharma here, an official spokesman said. The DDC elections along with panchayat bypolls commenced in J&K on Saturday. "In exercise of powers conferred under Section 36 of the Jammu and Kashmir Panchayati Raj Act, 1989, the Election Authority (State Election Commission) hereby prohibits conducting any exit poll and publishing or publicising/displaying the result of exit poll by means of the print or electronic media or in any other manner in the ongoing elections till 2 pm on December 19," Sharma said in the order. Justice done after 70 yrs: West Pak refugees

JAMMU, NOVEMBER 28

Enthusiasm was palpable among voters at polling booths here on Saturday as the maiden District Development Council (DDC) polls and panchayat byelections took off.

With the abrogation of Article 370, several communities like West Pakistan refugees, Valmikis and Gurkhas are now eligible to vote in local elections, purchase land and apply for jobs in Jammu and Kashmir. Besides, they can also contest elections.

"We had heard the words equality, justice and liberty, but today we can feel their significance," Sujati Bharti, a young voter from the West Pakistan refugee community, said standing in a queue outside a polling station at Kot Ghari in the Akhnoor block of Jammu.

She thanked the Centre for its decision to do away with the special status, saying members of her community were exercising their right to vote in local elections after 70 years.

Except for parliamentary elections, these refugees, were, till last year, barred in Jammu and Kashmir from voting in the Assembly, panchayat and urban local body elections.

Bishan Dass (67), another voter from the community, said, "We feel empowered. Earlier, nobody would come to us to seek votes. Now, all candidates approach us." — PTI

BHATESSA, NOVEMBER 28

A resident of the remote Kota Top village, situated over 11,000 feet in Jammu and Kashmir's Doda district, 103-year-old Zaitona Bibi has not missed a single election since 1957. This DDC election, she says, is no different.

Helped by her 24-year-old great-granddaughter Rabia Bano, Zaitona braved cold winds to trek to the Gujjar Basti polling station in Kharangal panchayat, around a kilometre from her house, to cast her vote. "I voted for the development of tribals of this belt who are facing hardships. They are socially, educationally, economically and politically backward," said Zaitona after returning from the polling station, located at 11,400 feet in the Bhalessa mountain ranges.

Zaitona, who belongs to the Gujjar tribe, has 14 grandchildren and 56 great-grandchildren, and 110 members of her family are eligible voters.

The centenarian, along with other elderly voters, was asked to stay back home in view of the Covid pandemic, but taking all precautions, she went to cast her vote. — PTI

The MHA sent a note to all cadre-controlling authorities to urgently compile a list of IAS, IPS and other all-India service officers who "may be willing" to serve on deputation to the first test for the Centre's move to restart the political process after the bifurcation of the erstwhile state into the union territories of J&K and Ladakh last August. How knitting came to Punjab

JASVINDER KAUR

It is hard to believe that knitting, a favourite pastime of women in the subcontinent during winter, came to India only during the British Raj. Christian missionaries helped in spreading this skill as girls were taught knitting in schools. Gradually, it became popular among women and replaced spinning as more people started wearing hand-knitted sweaters and socks.

Cotton on to wool

In the 19th century, people in Punjab were not in the habit of wearing sweaters, even when it was really cold in the winter. The wealthy preferred Pashmina shawls and the poor used woollen lois — for wrapping around oneself, as well as for bedding. Baden Powell (in 1872) writes, 'It is a remarkable fact that in the plains during the cold weather natives do not like woollen goods, it is only the poorer class that resorts to kambal or blanket. Everyone who could afford it, much prefers wearing several thicknesses of cotton cloth and coats padded with cotton wool are universally worn.'

Sir George Watt and Percy Brown also expressed similar thoughts in 1904 that, in general, cotton, rather than wool, was preferred throughout India. This has also been corroborated by other writers and gazetteers of the period. Hand-spun khadar was thicker and warmer than mill-made cotton and women used it to stitch their suits. Men often used a khes as a wrap instead of a warm chaddar. This practice was common in Punjab even in the 1990s and might still be prevalent at certain places by the older generation.

History of knitting

The process of knitting is believed to have originated in Egypt and developed in the hands of a Christian sect known as the Egyptian Copts, famous for their skills. It spread with the expansion of Christianity, reaching as far as Peru in the 16th century.

There are many theories attached with knitting and its spread. According to one theory, knitting was common in Italy and Spain before it reached England. Initially it started in Shetland Island in Scotland, before spreading to England in the 16th century. The story goes that the Spanish Armada owned by the Duke of Medina Sidonia was wrecked at Fair Isles (part of Shetland Isles). The rescued sailors were the ones to teach knitting to Fair Isles' natives. From there it slowly spread to England. Even today, Shetland wool is considered to be of superior quality and sweaters with a lot of patterns are called Fair Isle sweaters. These have patterns that are created by use of multiple colours.

Fair Isle sweaters were, worn by Edward,

Prince of Wales (later Edward VIII). He was the Captain of the Royal and Ancient Golf Club of St Andrews, Fife. In 1922, for The British Open, he wore a soft-collared white shirt, a tie with a geometric pattern, a Fair Isle sweater and plus fours. He thus started not only the fashion of this Scottish knitting style, but was also responsible for popularising plus fours (baggy knickerbockers reaching below the knee, formerly worn by men for hunting and golf). These derive the name from the fact that plus fours are cut four inches below the knee. Although this style was specifically intended for golf, yet it became fashionable for informal daywear for men in the 1920s and was specifically identified with the Prince of Wales. Some of the maharajas of Punjab as well as wealthy persons also wore these casually.

There is yet another theory where the Scots claim to have invented knitting. This is more so because the first 'Knitting Guild' founded in Paris, took for their patron saint, St Fiacre, the son of a Scottish King.'

Spreading the skill

Sir George Watt and Percy Brown in their catalogue of the 'Delhi Exhibition' of 1903 observe that 'knitting seems to have been unknown in India prior to the efforts of the missionaries'. It was taught in most female schools and girls initially learnt to knit socks or jorab. Knitting therefore came to be known as jorab-bunnana as it was the first article that most girls learnt to knit although they were not in the habit of wearing them.

Malcom Lyall Darling (1934) writes about a school in Moga where every girl at the high school had to make a homemade garment for their annual government inspection. Darling observes that while most girls made items that were suited to village life, yet some girls made knitted socks though they rarely wore them.

Socks get mentioned in books and gazetteers from the third quarter of the 19th century onwards and it was always said that people wore white socks. Baden Powell, describing the dress of the people of Lahore and Amritsar, mentions them as wearing white stockings along with embroidered shoes. It can be presumed that since the shoes were embroidered, they were of Indian style. William Crooke, writing at the beginning of the 20th century, describes an official — 'his long white stockings mark the "baboo" as clearly as short deer-skin socks distinguish Afghan.'

For a long time the socks worn in Europe were white and when these were introduced in India, most people wore only white socks. In Europe, white was the popular colour for socks though chemical dyes were introduced in 1860s. Although socks were available in India, not everyone wore them. Initially, it was only the wealthy and the western educated that used them.

We find that whenever knitting is mentioned by writers, it is always in the context of making socks. John Webster mentions that a woman in 1884 learnt to knit socks and gloves from a teacher. Baden Powell (1872) lists jails and orphanages of Punjab engaged in knitting. He lists the Mission Orphan School in Ludhiana, the Amritsar Female Orphanage, and the Female Penitentiary, Lahore, where knitting was taught.

A missionary practice

A. Latifi, author of 'Industrial Punjab' (1911), writes that 'It is a matter for congratulation that women have taken to socks making in Ludhiana as well as Wazirabad'. Writing some decades later in 1929, Darling mentions that in Ambala the wife of a missionary would visit the villages around and teach women how to knit cotton and woollen socks.

Knitting also spread to Punjab hills (now Himachal Pradesh). Missionaries have been credited with bringing knitting there as well.

The Moravian Mission in Kylang (Keylong), Lahaul, under Rev Heyde was established in 1854. Another place in Basahr (Simla district) was set up. They also set up schools at Peo (Reckong Peo) and Kylang (Keylong) that had 10 girls and who learnt singing, sewing & knitting stockings, etc. The girls learnt how to knit gloves and socks. The mission popularised knitting among the locals, and slowly more and more girls took to it in the region. Knitted products in Lahaul even today have multi-coloured patterns, similar to the Fair Isle designs, which could possibly reflect the early influence of missionaries. The threads for the gloves and the socks were at one time handspun by the women from local wool. The colours used were grey, brown, black, or white with multi-coloured patterns.

Rise of the machines

Along with hand knitting, machine knitting was also introduced in India. As technology advanced in Europe, knitting frame developed in the late 16th century. Machine-knitted socks in the 18th century replaced those made of cloth. Earlier socks and stockings were made with cloth that had to be cut according to the shape and size of the leg. Machine-made knitted woolens were made for the first time at Sialkot. Ludhiana became a major centre of production in the early 20th century and by 1911, there were 150 machines for making socks and eight for vests in the city.

In the cities of Punjab, wealthy men had started to wear sweaters before they did so in the villages. For women, sweaters came in much later. However, around the 1920s and 1930s, as knitting gained popularity, girls and women took to knitting even though they themselves might not have worn sweaters.

Making it to magazines

Knitting magazines, books and pamphlets were available in local shops and women closely followed patterns provided in these. This enabled women to knit using European patterns and colours as even colour specifications were given. Some magazines like 'The India Ladies Magazine' gave patterns for knitting cardigans. As some magazines were expensive, many women copied the pattern and the instructions.

Knitting needles and wool came from England initially and were advertised in the local newspapers like The Tribune for sale of knitting yarn and needles. Many local shops also had connections abroad and got their supplies from there and advertised about it in magazines and newspapers.

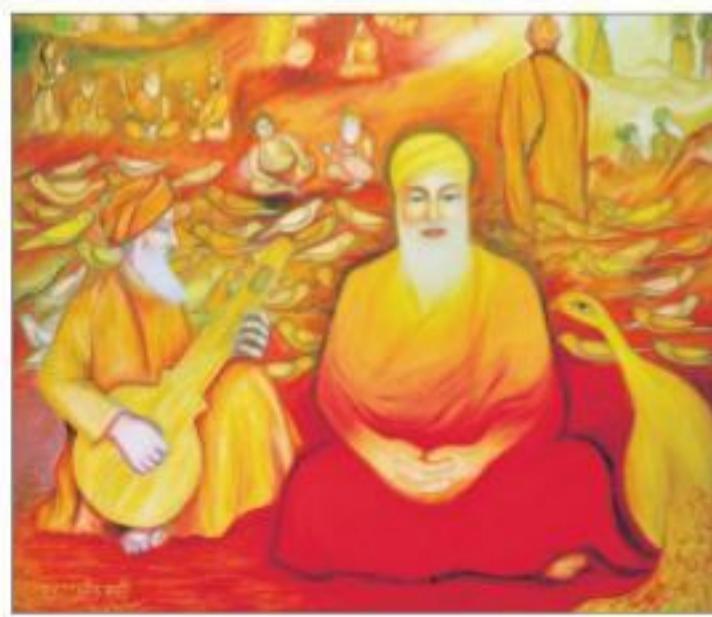

Knitting was not as popular as crochet work primarily as not everyone wore sweaters. However, with time, the popularity of crochet work declined and in post-Independent Punjab, knitting became popular. Slowly, as more and more people took to wearing sweaters, knitting became a necessity as readymade sweaters were not readily available and even if they were, they were very expensive.

Envisioning Guru Nanak Dev

ROOPINDER SINGH

THE 550th birth anniversary of Guru Nanak Dev brought about a much-awaited focus on the founder of Sikhism. With his unique vision, he saw the world as one created by the Creator, and all beings as his creation. His message of unity of mankind has transcended centuries and guided his followers.

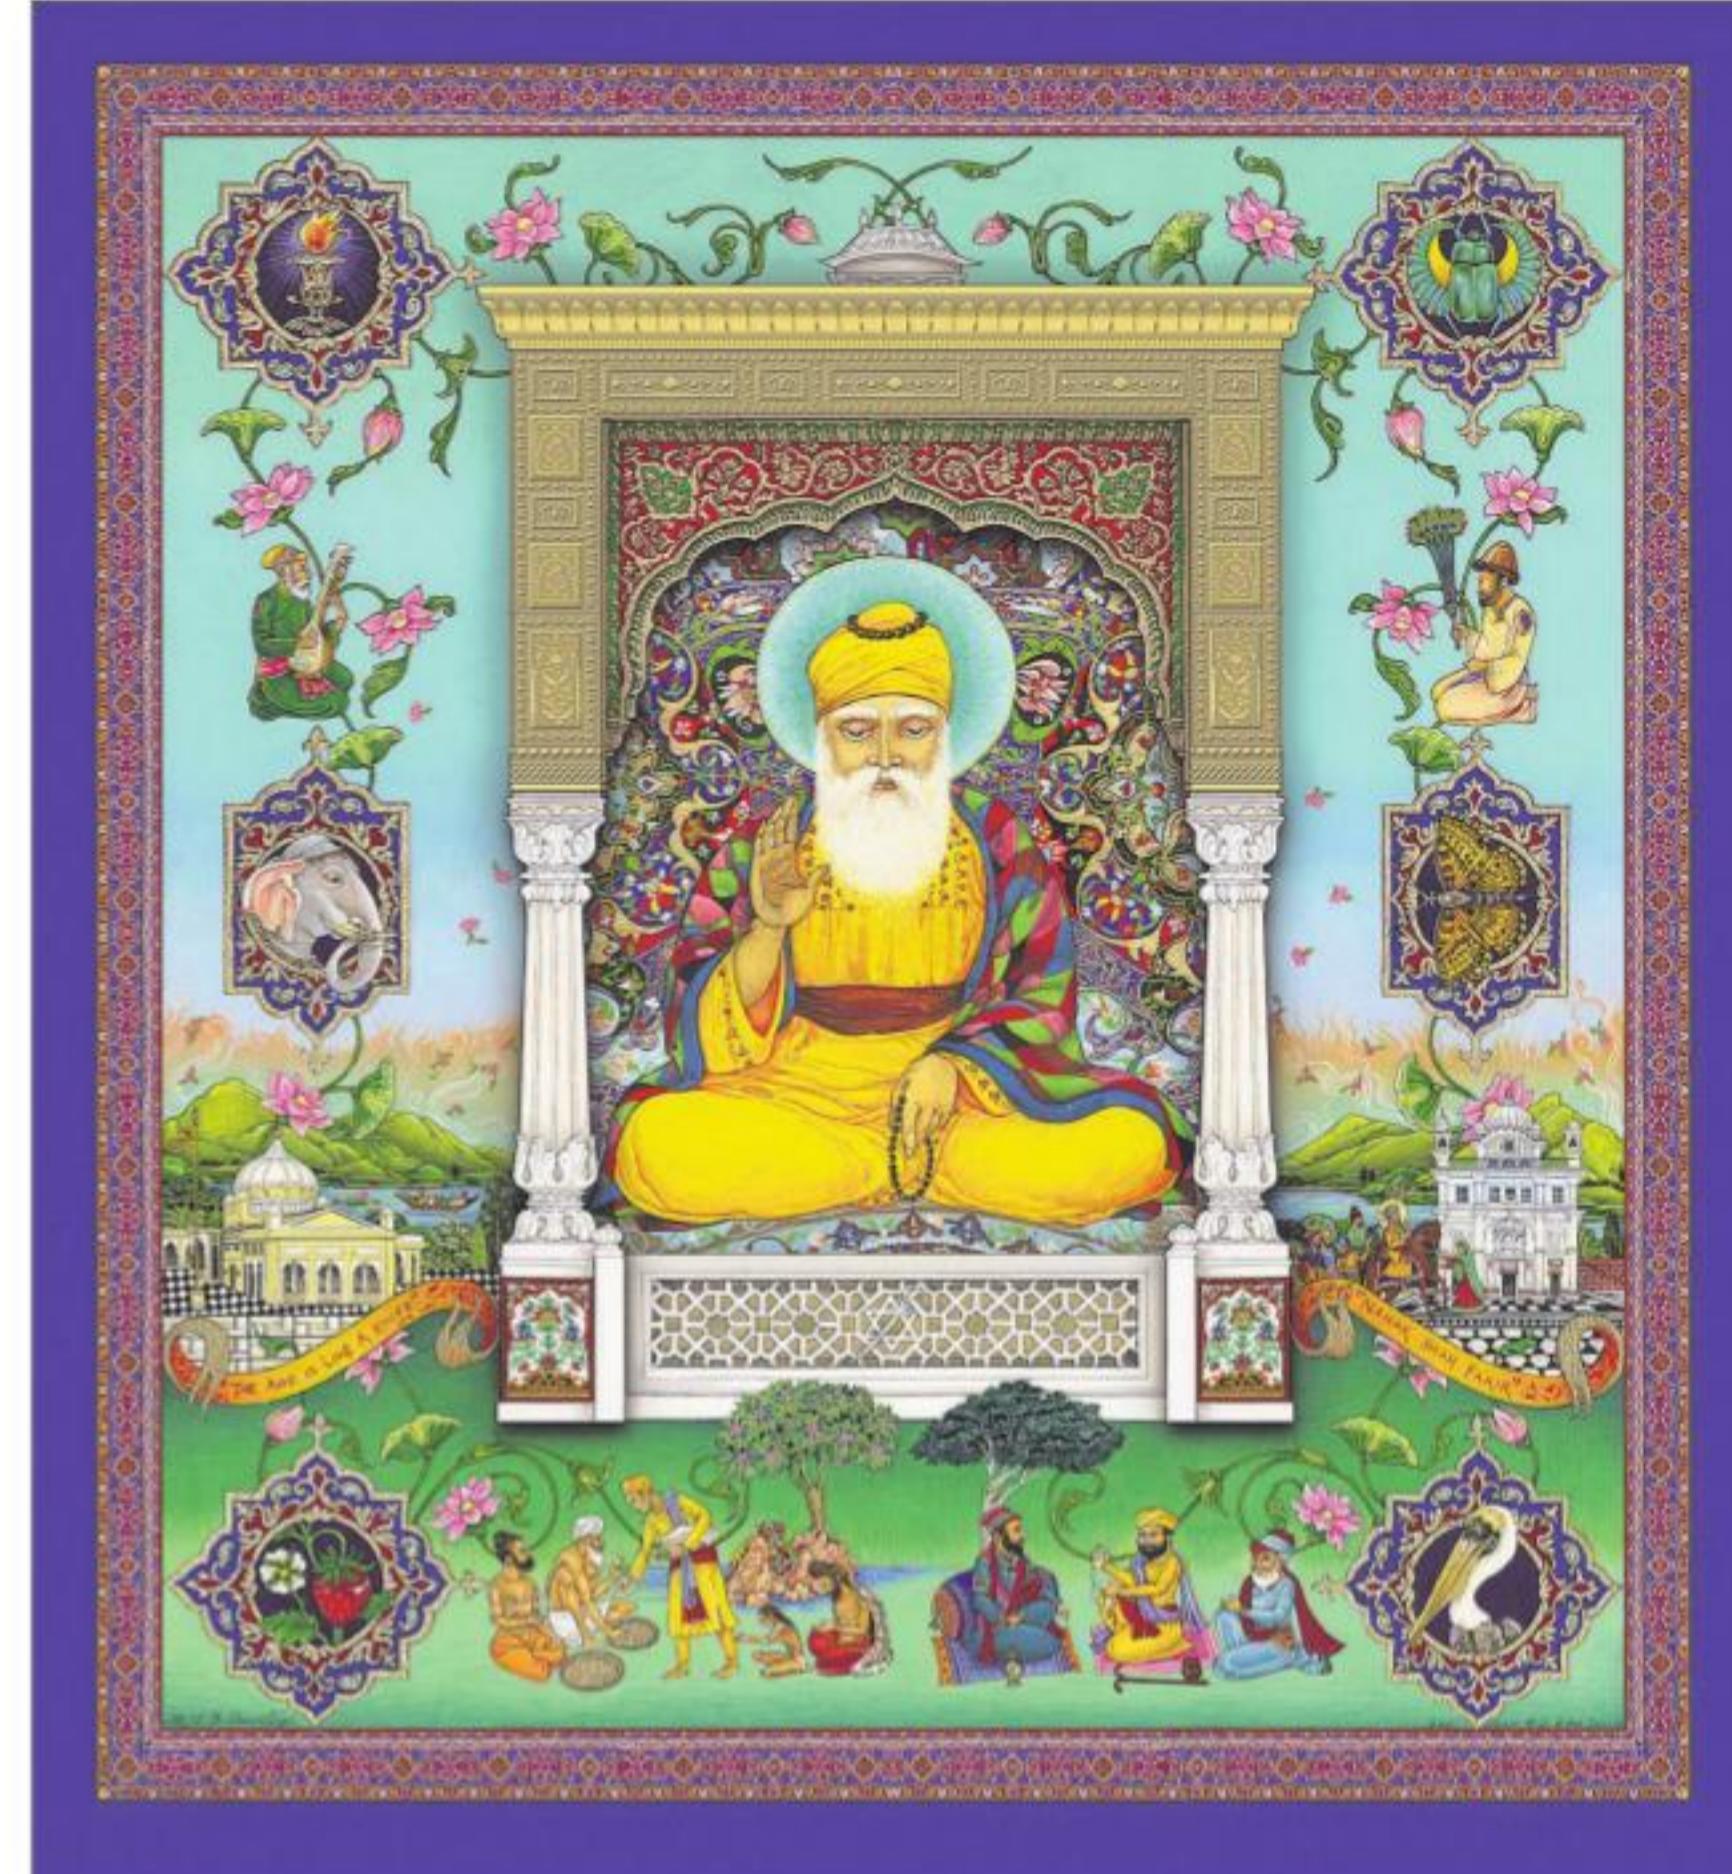

There is only one God, said Guru Nanak, although there were many ways to reach Him. By transcending the 'my way to my God' is better than 'your way to your God' debate and acknowledging that there are other paths to reach Him, Guru Nanak set the stage for interfaith dialogue. He sought out scholars and religious leaders and held discourse with them. Today's world, wracked by toxic tribalism in various forms, needs the succour that comes from the teachings of the Guru, who declared: "There is no Hindu, no Musselman, all are creatures of God."

The year was marked with seminars, books, documentaries, and exhibitions. It was a time to dwell on the teachings of Guru Nanak and to understand his legacy. Governments, institutions and individuals all enthusiastically participated in the year-long celebrations that began in 2018. The celebrations were international, reflecting the presence and strength of the Sikh diaspora.

Bhai Vir Singh Sahitya Sadan, New Delhi, held an early, high-profile event on November 10, 2018. In the presence of former Prime Minister Dr Manmohan Singh and His Holiness the Dalai Lama, Prof BN Goswamy delivered the first lecture in the series, 'Truth Does Not Grow Old, Ever'. Later, the Dalai Lama inaugurated an impressive exhibition, titled 'From

Rabab to Nagara: Life and Legacy of Guru Nanak'. It was mounted by the National Institute of Panjab Studies, a unit of Bhai Vir Singh Sahitya Sadan, New Delhi, and was a labour of love of Dr

Mohinder Singh, director of the Sadan. 'From Rabab to Nagara' explores various expressions of the Guru's teachings and their implementation.

A series of lectures continued at the Bhavan, even as the exhibition travelled to various cities in India, where it was well received. Now it has been presented in the form of a coffee-table book, with the foreword by Dr Manmohan Singh. The lavishly mounted volume has quite a large collection of pictures that span time and styles of visual representation, representing the world of the Guru envisioned by artists over centuries.

We have paintings, murals, photographs of gurdwaras, along with descriptive passages about their significance. The Janamsakhis, or hagiographic accounts of the life and teachings of Guru Nanak, provided the basis for Pahari miniatures that were drawn by talented artists. The same holds true for more recent artists like Sobha Singh, Kirpal Singh and Devinder Singh. The book has their paintings too. Contemporary works of Arpana Caur, The Singh Twins — Amrit and Rabindra, Sidhartha, Bhagat Singh, Kanwar Dhillon, Swaranjot Savi and Sharandeep Singh are also represented.

Photographs form a significant part and the works of William Baker, Lala Deen Dayal, Lance Dane, Deidi von Schaeven, Raghu Rai, Ashok Dilwali, Sondeep Shankar and Malkiat Singh have been featured.

What makes this compendium particularly useful is the sheer breadth of work that has been collected in one place, and the expansion of the canvas from Guru Nanak to include his successors. A section on photographs that shows how the Sikhs celebrate their Guru's legacy in various parts of the world gives vignettes of the diaspora and its expression of devotion.

By turning the exhibition into a book, and inserting the text that gives it context and provides valuable information about the Gurus and the Sikhs, the Sadan has created a memorable volume. The colourful compendium is bound to find a place of pride in many libraries. It should.

Overarching legacy of the soft-mannered Brutalist

In pioneering architect Kuldip Singh's death, India has lost an icon of modernism in a post-colonial world

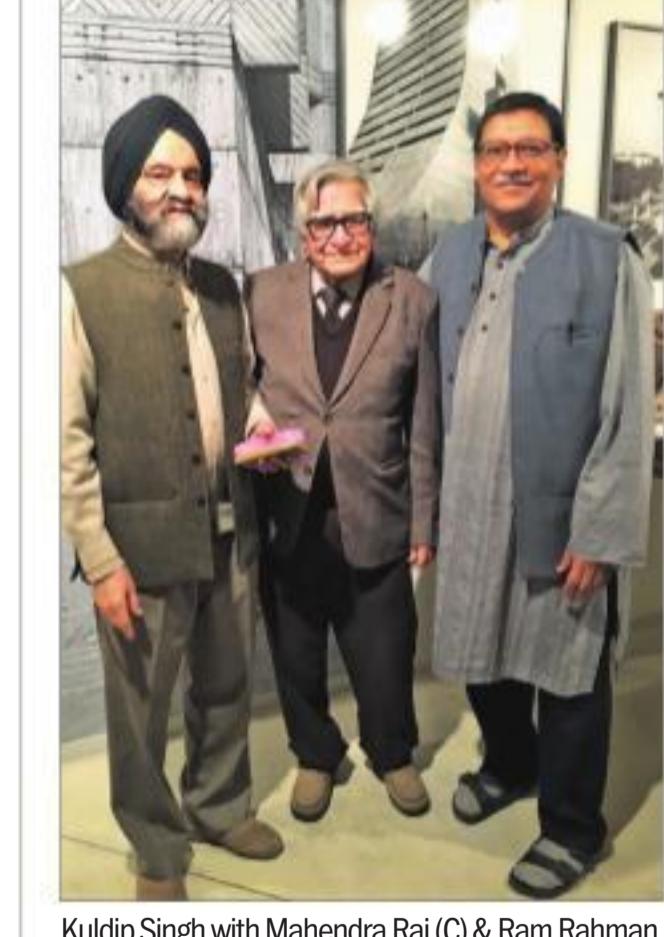

SARIKA SHARMA

INDA was a free nation now and Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru had wanted it to break free of the fetters of the colonial past. Among the young architects translating this into reality was Kuldip Singh, a soft-spoken Sikh lad whose experiments in Brutalism, along with his contemporaries, were to change the landscape of Delhi over the next two decades. His death earlier this month has resulted in celebration of his work. He was 86.

"The British had left Delhi with an infrastructure unsuited to the state's ambitions. Nehru wanted to create a new and prosperous country from the ashes left behind by the Raj. This required an expanded civil service and buildings to house them and facilitate their work. So, Kuldip was one amongst many, but his buildings were singularly beautiful, challenging, and inventive," says Michael S Dodson, Professor of South Asian History at Indiana University, Bloomington, who is writing a book on modernist design in Delhi during the 1960s, '70s and '80s. This was an era when Kuldip, along with Raj Rewal, his partner for long, and structural engineer Mahendra Raj, were names to reckon with.

Born in Shimla and educated at the Delhi Polytechnic, the most famous of Kuldip Singh's works are undoubtedly the New Delhi Municipal Corporation (NDMC) building at Palika Kendra and the National Cooperative Development Corporation (NCDC) building in Hauz Khas. Both beautifully exemplify Brutalism — geometric structures making use of concrete, a style fairly new to India then.

Dodson says Singh had a mastery over his materials. "He knew how to sculpt and finish concrete so that it had a real character to it, and the technical challenge of the two wings that lean together was formidable. In this respect, his relationship with the engineer Mahendra Raj was critical in building new, unprecedented structures." The two had worked on both NDMC and NCDC.

Ram Rahman, son of architect Habib Rahman, curated 'Delhi, Building the Modern', an exhibition of photographs and models, at the Kiran Nadar Museum of Art in Delhi in 2017. These included Kuldip's work as also those of master architects of the Capital. He says Kuldip Singh was one of the second comparison to the first decade since Independence, he says there were constraints, and that required them to be creative. "Architecturally speaking, Delhi's modernist architecture is some of the very finest in the world from this period," he adds.

Former principal of Chandigarh College of Architecture, Rajnish Wattas says Singh's buildings were very Corbusian in expression and form. Agrees Dodson, who sees Le Corbusier's presence in India as just a starting point for post-colonial Indian architecture. "Architects such as Singh and Rewal took those basics of form and material used in Chandigarh and made them truly Indian."

generation architects — first heralded by the likes of his father and Achyut Kanvinde — who were trained in Delhi and started their practice in the 1960s. "They were very aware of the ideals of the Nehruvian period — building a new India with a forward looking scientific perspective. Their designs reflected these visionary ideals especially when budgets had increased and more material progress had been made in steel and cement manufacture. His work was very graphic and sculptural on a huge scale with his exposed concrete buildings in Delhi."

Kuldip's friend and Chandigarh-based architect SD Sharma says concrete provides a sculpturous form, has colour of the sky and doesn't grow old, thus being preferred by the likes of Corbusier. Dodson says concrete was also the material of choice for this period as it was relatively cheap and relied on human labour, which was also plentiful. Even if the budgets had risen in

Banks liable for sale deed loss

The standards of banking practices make it mandatory for banks to return the deed and other documents within 15 days of loan repayment

CONSUMERS BEWARE!

PUSHPA GIRIMAJI

Ten years ago, I bought a flat with a home loan from a bank. Three months ago, I repaid the entire loan and asked the bank to return the sale deed, which it had kept as collateral. However, the bank denied ever having received the sale deed from me! I am worried because that's the most important document of ownership. Please advise.

The bank has probably lost the sale deed. Hence, it's now trying to escape liability by saying that you never gave them the paper. Without collecting the sale deed, how could it have ever given you the loan in the first place? Besides, the bank always has to give the customer the list of documents submitted to it for obtaining the loan. I am sure the sale deed is also listed there. So send a copy of that to the bank as proof of their having taken the sale deed and ask them to return it to you.

As per the minimum standards of banking practices, drawn up by the Banking Codes and Standards Board of India, the bank should return the sale deed and other documents collected from you, within 15 days of your repaying the loan. For any delay, the bank has to compensate you. In case of loss of paper, the bank has to also help you get duplicate papers, at its cost.

Are there any recent orders of the consumer court that I can quote in my complaint?

In State Bank of India vs Vallu Sowjanya (RP No 4550 of 2013, date of order October 21, 2020), the National Consumer Disputes Redressal Commission looked at a similar case. The complainant here had taken a loan of ₹3,50,000 to buy a house. After repayment of the loan, when she asked the bank to return the original sale deed, the bank denied having ever received them, forcing the consumer to go to the consumer court for relief.

The bank's argument was that the cus-

In the island of masks

Faces of gods, goddesses, demons, ogres and otherworldly characters from Indian mythology and folklore will spice up your visit to Majuli island in Assam

HARLEEN GURUNAY MAJITHIA

THROUGHOUT the world, masks have been used in rituals and festivities. While the West has its masquerade parties, India, too, has a unique cultural legacy of masks and mask making. Majuli island on the Brahmaputra river in Assam has carved a special place for itself among culture aficionados across the world, especially for its craft of mask-making.

The island can be accessed by ferries via Jorhat city. The dock on the island gives it a barren and desolate look, but do not fall for this mirage because as you wheel inside, Majuli welcomes you with its greenery and offers you the colours, tastes, music, art and traditions of Assam and its tribal communities, especially if you visit it during the festive season around Dussehra and Diwali. Inside Majuli, the island can be best enjoyed on bicycles and bikes. The rustic thatched bamboo huts in traditional Mishmi style on the riverside or in the fields create picturesque views. As you traverse through Majuli, the everyday agrarian life is worth observing. Homestays are popular on the island where freshly brewed rice beer and delicacies like porang apin (rice cooked in tora leaves) and pannam (fish baked in banana leaves) offer new experiences to the palate.

The island of Majuli is also the seat of neo-Vaishnavite culture of Assam that houses Satras or monasteries. These are said to have been established by Mahapurush Sankardeva in the late 15th century. Fine details on the decorative wood panels on some ancient Satras represent tribal art, folk culture and heritage of the Ahom kingdom. The Satras are important centres of traditional performing arts. Each Satra has a distinct identity and serves as a sanctum to a different art form. For instance, the Auniati Satra stores ancient artefacts and is famous for traditional Mishmi tribal dances and paalnaam, a congregational prayer. The Dakhinpat and Garamur Satras stage theatre performances raas leela and bhaonas, which make use of dramatic masks. The renowned among these is Samaguri Satra that has brought Majuli to the foreground for its art of mask-making with some of its remarkable folk creations also being exhibited in the Victoria & Albert Museum in London.

Use of indigenous material

What differentiates these masks from other folk masks across the country is that these are made from indigenous material of the island and not Plaster of Paris, and without the use of synthetic colour. Special attention is paid to intricate details and technicality (newer kinds of masks have movable jaws, making dialogue delivery easier). The traditional art of making masks is passed down from father to son or from the guru or teacher at the Satra to the students.

The technique involves making a three-dimensional bamboo framework onto which clay-dipped pieces of cloth are plastered. After drying it, a mix of clay and cowdung is layered on it. This helps to add detail and give depth to the mask. Jute fibres and water hyacinth are used for beard, moustaches and hair. Once the mask is complete, a kordhani (bamboo file) is used to burnish the mask. And finally, drama is added to the masks with deft painting. The mask-makers of Majuli prefer using vegetable dyes and colours derived from hengul (red) and hentul (yellow) stones.

Three different types of masks are made. The Mukula bhaona covers the face, Lotokoi, which is bigger in size, extends to the chest and Cho Mukha is a head and body mask. The masks are made exactly the way luminary Sankardeva described the characters in his Ankiya Natya from which bhaonas have emerged. These bamboo masks are light in weight and comfortable for the performers to wear. It takes approximately 10 to 15 days to make the mask.

The technique involves making a three-dimensional bamboo framework onto which clay-dipped pieces of cloth are plastered. After drying it, a mix of trials from Indian mythology and folklore, as attendees either smiling or scoffing at you, will spice up your visit to the otherwise peaceful Majuli.

HOW TO REACH: It is a 15-km-drive from the city of Jorhat to Nimati Ghat from where the island of Majuli can be accessed through ferries. If you're in luck, you can catch a glimpse of the beautiful sunrise and sunset (although ferries generally start by 8 am and end by 4 pm; the timing varies according to season).

BEST TIME TO TRAVEL: The island is open throughout the year but October and November are the best time to experience the island in its vibrancy and festivity.

WHERE TO STAY: There are many hotels and homestays here. The Satras also offer guesthouses to devotees and tourists.

WHAT ELSE TO DO: Majuli is a birdwatcher's delight. One can spot rare species of migratory birds, which arrive here in winter.

Longing & belonging post Partition

M RAJIVLOCHAN

INDIA'S seventh Deputy Prime Minister was born in Pakistan; Pakistan's 10th President was born in India. How did this come about is a question that has puzzled a number of people. For Marina Wheeler, such questions became important because it underpinned the personal history of her Indian mother, who was born in Pakistan and lived in England. The result is a very readable story, a story that is the history of those times when Punjab got partitioned, as seen through the experiences of a young woman whose family was forced to flee as the bloody Partition was imposed upon an unsuspecting people by their political leaders.

The story is also about how people learnt to let go of the past, while ensuring that the traumas of the past did not hurt them as they went about carving a future for themselves. The past clung in unspoken ways, but was never allowed to harm the present or the future. As Dip tells her daughter, who is writing the story of the Partition of India through the eyes of her mother, 'Often I felt that here (in Sussex), with Charles, I had regained the paradise I lost in Sargodha.'

It is also a story of how, even at the time when their leaders betrayed them, the common people took charge of their own fate. As Dip explains to her daughter Iqbal's famous verse, Khudi ko kar buland...: 'I understood it to mean that you shape your own fate. It wasn't just mapped out for you.'

The author (L) and her mother, Dip Singh, at Bedales school in Hampshire, England.

The story shows us interesting snippets about the interfacing of people with their history. The people in Pakistan tell the author that 'the British were popular... as they reinstated Islamic worship which Ranjit Singh's intolerant successors had banned'. We are also told of the 'fearsome Emperor Aurangzeb', who built the Badshahi Mosque 'to commemorate defeating the Hindu King Shivaji in battle'.

The boundaries of a partitioned Punjab were drawn after consulting, the author notes, the Muslim League, the Congress, the Christians, the Anglo-Indians, the Ahmadis, and the Scheduled Castes. The Sikh claim over the canal colonies, she remarks, was based on their having poured in money and labour in the land, as also to the fact that it was the spiritual home to some of the most important Sikh gurdwaras, including Guru Nanak's birthplace. Justice Din Muhammad, however, dismissed the Sikh claim for being of no consequence. He insisted that Sikh rule over Punjab was trivial and, their 'shrines were built to commemorate the most insignificant'.

A remarkable character of this story is the absence of rancour. Even after the forced displacement from Sargodha to Delhi, after witnessing the horrors of Partition, Dip recalls that everyone in her circle of acquaintances in Delhi in the aftermath of Partition 'wanted Hindu-Muslim unity'. No one approved of the 'RSS militants intent on creating a Hinduocratic state'.

A nugget of memory that particularly caught my eye was the memory of Dip and six other girls from Lady Irwin College, where they studied, going to wish Nehru on his birthday on November 14, 1948. Six of us went to Nehru's office to wish him a happy birthday. We addressed him as Chacha Nehru because he loved children.'

Amidst turbulent times, this is a story of, to use a phrase that the author uses in a different context, 'carefully crafted equilibrium'. It is worth reading. And mulling over.

WHAT is the worst thing that could happen to you? Did you not always know you would end up here? Who would you want to be a witness to your life? What makes life worth living for you? Life skills educator Deepak Ramola ponders over 50 such questions in his book. Strikingly fresh, yet searing, these questions are aimed at inspiring one to push beyond one's boundaries. And he tries to seek answers in the lives of women of the Maasai tribe, at times young girls in Afghanistan and sex workers in Kamathipura, from the lessons of earthquake survivors in Nepal to Syrian refugees in Europe, among many more.

Humour to the aid of unsettling questions

GAURAV KANTHWAL

WHAT is the relation between environmental research, Indian patriarchy and human-animal conflict? Read 'Patriarchy and the Pangolin' to see how an attempt has been made to connect three diverse fields of interest.

Environmental researcher Aditi Patil has tried to correlate the three, and some more, in her book based on six months' field research related to the National Agroforestry Policy in Gujarat.

Slotted in the natural history/travelogue/feminism category, Patil projects her work as an effort to share farmers', and particularly women folk's, lives and views in a way that are never recorded in research data.

In plain words, the book conveys that the humans, knowingly or unknowingly, harm the animal world, which acts as their biggest ally in survival. Similarly, the patriarchal system marginalises its women, who are in fact their force multipliers.

Noted economist and social scientist Jean Dreze, in the blurb, endorses the book, "Under the cover of irresistible humour, it ambushes the reader with unsettling questions about Indian society and the world of research. A bittersweet delight."

Whether the humour is irresistible or just ordinary, a reader can find out in the beginning itself. There are hardly any unsettling questions which are being asked for the first time, but a lot of effort has gone into making the anecdotes bittersweet with wit and satire. As far as delight is concerned, the reader will be a better judge.

The author tries to build an atmosphere of juvenile bliss with phrases like 'the intoxicating smell of damp soil' and 'butterflies gently hopping on my unruly curls and examining my nose-pin'.

William Shakespeare, Walt Whitman, Ernest Hemingway and George Bernard Shaw, too, find a mention in a book on natural history. The narrative of 216 pages is recurrently blotched by the bitterness of a researcher, citizen disgruntled with the government of the day.

In sum, a book for those who have a lot of leisure time.

An exercise in sincerity

FRANCESCA MARINO'S name rings more than a bell in India. She stayed for months around the ghats in Varanasi, wrote a scathing account about Pakistan and can effortlessly drape a sari. More important, she was the first to detail the casualties in the Indian Air Force's Balakot air strike with scant corroborating evidence. The channels ran away with the casualty figures, that had a resounding impact on the 2019 General Election.

Banned from entering Pakistan six years back, she re-gathers the troubled history of Balochistan with the addition of the latest provocation — the China-Pakistan Economic Corridor, a project about which the locals were neither informed, nor consulted. The corridor seems to be making its way towards Gwadar port wrapped in a gruesome package of disappearances and mutilated bodies in a landscape described by Robert Kaplan in 'Monsoon' as 'wild and wooly'.

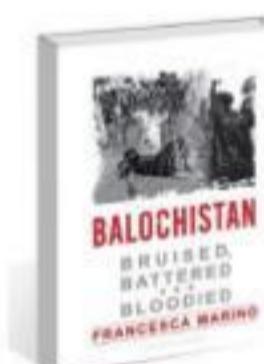

As was the case with Kashmir, the Baloch people — had that option been given to them — would have preferred independence. The sullenness, and so has the repression, intensified as the Pakistani state made "developmental" inroads to get at its fabled resources, exemplified by a Baloch proverb: every step a Baloch takes after he is born is on gold.

Marino starts off with the right footing by describing the fate of Balochs akin to that of the Kurds: both nationalities were divided among themselves by several empires, in this case by the Persian and British. The sporadic liveliness is due to familiarity with the many who suffered. But to her credit, she has also detailed the Balochs in Iran. Unlike Sylvia Matheson's granular 'The Tigers of Baluchistan' on the strength of living among the Bugtis for five years, Marino's effort is an exercise in sincerity. —TNS

A royal treat for the gun buffs

MEET MALHOTRA

THE cover photograph, heft and feel of the coffee table book, 'The Maharaja of Jodhpur's Guns', is enough to make a gun lover drool. My initial excitement turned to confusion as the book attempts far more than what its caption and cover suggest.

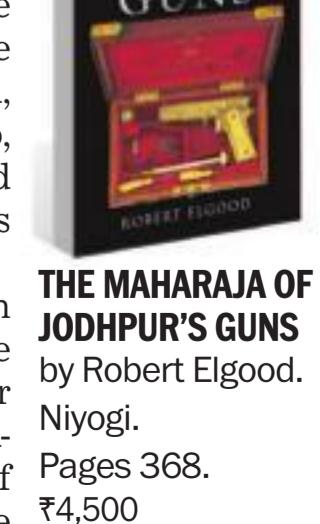

Pages upon pages of scholarly writing regarding the evolution of guns are well researched but in such tedious detail that they do not fit well with the coffee table character. After all, such books are more for glossy pictures, less for elaborate texts! The history of various types of guns introduced in India keeps an eager reader away from what should really have been the central theme — photographs and brief descriptions of some of the exquisite fire arms owned by the Maharaja of Jodhpur. Indeed, there is plenty of that fare too, but the overly scholarly and elaborate details of the starters nearly mar the main course.

The book, however, soon redeems itself and we get to see what the cover whetted our appetite for — excellent photography and descriptive sketches of some of the guns belonging to the erstwhile Maharaja and his family.

Pictures of sporting guns of classic pedigree — Purdy and Sons, Holland and Holland, Churchill Brothers, etc — abound.

Photography and printing is of high order, showing, in many instances, the beautiful detailing and engraving on the guns, transforming the weapons to a work of art. Recounting of some story or history associated with each gun makes for greater interest. Guns of American manufacturers are not far behind. In many cases, special engraving or grips show the exclusive ownership of the weapons. Pictures of pistols from Colt, Browning, Hi-Standard, Luger, Walther are aplenty.

Of special interest is the chapter dealing with guns made under the directions of Maharaja Hanwant Singh, who was, it would appear, our indigenous John Browning! His interest in small arms, design and manufacture was evident in his making his own version of the 1918 Thompson sub-machine gun. He also got made a unique .22 pistol at his workshop. His precocity was apparent by the bull-pup configuration rifle designed by him well before the configuration became popular in the 1970s.

Overall, as a coffee table assemblage, the book recommends itself. Hits the bull's eye, if you will, specially for gun buffs.

Rebuilding J&K Police in 1997

THE INWARD EYE

GURBACHAN JAGAT

With full backing of MHA, infrastructure, arms, vehicles were made available. Thousands of constables and NGOs were recruited, but J&K Police lacked the facility to train them. Punjab, Haryana and Delhi took on a few thousand each and devoted personal attention to training free of cost. The country responded to the dire need, as the enemy was not sitting idle.

As always, Jammu and Kashmir has figured prominently on the national horizon, the last two years being no exception, and tumultuous changes effected there have shaken the very foundations of the structure — changes which were not entirely unexpected. However, in doing so, we may have played into the hands of our enemies, who are always looking for opportunities to create divisions and weaken our republic. The tremors are being felt across the erstwhile state in most spheres of life. Trust is the basis of all human relations, and this was what we were working towards for decades. This trust lies fractured today and I'm hopeful that we can rebuild it. We have to stay united even as we respect each other's diversity all over the country. I also was a participant in the task of strengthening this 'trust' through the rebuilding of J&K Police.

Elections to the J&K Assembly were held towards the end of 1996 and Dr Farooq Abdullah was sworn in as the Chief Minister of the National Conference government. At some point thereafter, the Union Ministry of Home Affairs took the decision to appoint the DGP from outside the J&K cadre to head J&K Police. I was asked if I was willing to go on deputation from the Punjab cadre and I agreed to do so, considering it a great privilege to head the police in the trouble-torn state. I took over as DGP in February 1997 and stayed on till the end of 2000.

It was winter and so I joined at Jammu and quickly completed the formalities of calling on the Governor, the CM, the Chief Secretary and officers of the armed forces, paramilitary and police. I then began a tour of the Valley police stations and those in Rajori, Poonch, Doda and other districts. I interacted with the constabulary and junior officers everywhere and took the opportunity of calling on senior Army/PMF officers in the area. I called upon the police officers and men to honour their uniform and act together in defence of the motherland against foreign agents and their local supporters. My aim was only one — to win the trust of the police and the people and this could only be done if I was seen to be fair, unbiased, compassionate and professional. The force lacked in infrastructure and modern arms, vehicles, communications, etc. With full backing of the MHA, we assured them that all of this would be available in a matter of months and the only thing expected from them was loyalty, devotion to duty and good intelligence for our operations.

One of the policy decisions was to augment the strength of the police force. This was deemed necessary not only as it was seriously undermanned, but because the employment generated would be of immense benefit to the local population. In the months to come, the remotest of areas was covered and a large body of able-bodied young men were recruited. We would give short notice before going to an area and then transport the selected candidates to the nearest Police Lines. This was done in order to remove all scope for middle men, ambiguity and the accompanying nuisance of bribery and underhand dealing. The young men could not believe their luck and would often ask the recruiting party to take them along at that very moment. One could see abject poverty in the remote parts of the state and a desolation which years of conflict had brought about.

These young men from the remote border hamlets proved to be a great asset in counter-terrorist operations and became an integral part of our protective shield. They were not only familiar with the treacherous mountainous terrain and moved nimbly on it, but were an excellent source of information. Religion or region was no consideration except that the balance was maintained between Jammu, Kashmir and Ladakh. The positive results of this were visible in a few months and 'trust' started becoming a reality. The policemen came to form the vanguard of the Special Operation Groups (SOGs), which also contained elements of the Army, PMF, SPOs. The men behind the success of the SOGs were these local boys, who provided real-time actionable intelligence.

Modern equipment started coming in and we first ensured that the transport, communication and arms, etc.

were given to the police stations. This led to further strengthening of our credibility and the police officers and men had a new spring in their step. Senior officers were given due regard and responsibility assigned to them, which they gladly accepted and discharged. We started developing into a team at headquarters and in the field. After due deliberation, we posted young and bold officers in the districts and told them to work carefully and fearlessly and we would ensure total moral and material support. We facilitated on an urgent basis the induction of approximately 35 state police officers into the IPS (something which had been lying pending for seven-eight years) by coordinating with the MHA, DoPT and UPSC. This led to an increased level of motivation. All this was made possible by the continued support of Delhi and the state government. During my tenure of approximately four years, I saw three changes in government at the Centre and as many Prime Ministers. Not one of them diluted the fight against terror and to the contrary, it only strengthened with time. The purpose, the direction and the goal was common — to defeat the designs of our enemy and build a strong, unified, effective police force. We were fully trusted by the Centre and the state government, which enabled us to go from strength to strength.

Another example of the country coming together on this quest was the training of new recruits. We had recruited thousands of constables and non-gazetted officers, but lacked the facility to train them. I made a request to the heads of police forces in Punjab, Haryana and Delhi and they took on a few thousand each and devoted personal attention to their training. This exposure to other states and police forces was very useful to our men. To top it all, Punjab, Haryana and Delhi refused to charge us anything for the training. Yes, the country responded to our dire need, and our need was indeed dire as the enemy was not sitting idle. Massive attempts at infiltration were made and Pakistan, freed from its 'jihad' in Afghanistan after installing a Taliban government there, had diverted major resources and manpower towards Kashmir. In the years leading up to Kargil, we were put hard to the test, but the young men of J&K Police held strong. Many were martyred in the defence of our republic. During the Kargil war, many attempts were made by the ISI to create disturbances and violence within the state to create an image of a revolution within. It is to the credit of the J&K Police and other forces that our shield held strong — a quiet battle was fought by many an unnamed policeman in his remote police station. This was especially commendable as all the regular Army units on internal security duty were withdrawn overnight and only gradually replaced by RR units.

Here I must pause and acknowledge the tremendous contribution of the armed forces, the PMF, the intelligence agencies and all the allied forces and institutions which worked together under the Unified Command. Above all, the support of the Chief Minister and MHA was total. Only once did the Deputy PM come up with an apprehension about arming of the J&K Police and SPOs on a large scale with modern weapons. I assured him that there would be no desertions or loss of arms. At the time of demitting office, I reminded him of his fears and informed him that these had been unfounded and in all the three regions of the state, we had a loyal, trained and dedicated force. Unity in diversity, combined with a strong federal structure, has been our strength. It is what distinguishes us from our fanatical neighbour. I have always believed that if we had worked more towards establishing a vibrant democracy in J&K and held the politicians and bureaucrats accountable to the people, the situation would have been vastly different. I do hope that years of fighting the barbarians have not made us more like them. As Roosevelt said, 'War is young men dying and old men talking.' It is easy to draw lines on maps and make proclamations while in positions of power — the ramifications are felt for long.

The 'jugalbandi' worth emulating examples of two artistes never overshadowing each other, playing in perfect sync with the mood of the raga and the beat. Sitapati has taken this metaphor to elaborate on the relationship of two outstanding politicians of the BJP and their lifelong friendship and political styles to bring the party to a stage where it is today.

These two are Atal Bihari Vajpayee and LK Advani. Not one to shy away from personal lives when assessing political careers, Sitapati has brought out of the woodwork Vajpayee's intriguing relationship with his long-time companion, Mrs Kaul. Few ever saw her, fewer still ever spoke of her but the chitterati of Lutyen's Delhi were full of stories about the power the lady wielded over her partner. Significantly, Vajpayee's funeral pyre was lit by his foster daughter, Mrs Kaul's daughter. Naturally, given the prissy and moralistic stand of his own party, many elders from the RSS and BJP evidently tried to coax Mr Vajpayee to consider distancing himself, but it must be said in praise of the man that he never caved in and although their relationship always remained discreet, it was never hidden away like those of several other leaders one can name.

Biographies are not easy to write and political biographies are a genre not many have been able to handle well. In India, where it is considered bad form to speak ill of the dead and keep a worshipful distance from one's ancestors, few biographers have been able to go beyond hagiography. To recreate in flesh and blood the life of a person warts and all, while retaining one's affection or admiration, is not an easy task. I discovered this when I wrote a memoir of my own mother, a writer and complex character.

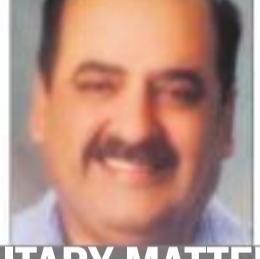

A few years ago, one was introduced to a young writer, Vinay Sitapati, through a biography he wrote of the late Narasimha Rao. 'Half a Lion' was an eye-opener that gave me a totally new perspective of a man his own party seemed so eager to bury. Sitapati was handed a trunk full of papers by Rao's son and although Rao himself had written a semi-autobiographical novel once, it was left to Sitapati to do full justice to a man who was not just a consummate politician, but a scholar and polyglot of extraordinary proportions. Sitapati based his work not just on the papers and personal notes he received from Rao's son, but on long conversations with the men and women Rao shared a personal relationship with, including a woman journalist whom all of Delhi knew as his close friend and confidante. Recently, Sitapati has published a second book, titled 'Jugalbandi'.

I have only read some excerpts yet, but my appetite is whetted. 'Jugalbandi' is a name given to a kind of musical form when two artistes playing different instruments improvise a performance that blends two styles and two kinds of music into a harmonious whole. Readers will recall some outstanding recordings of Pandit Ravi Shankar and Ustad Ali Akbar Khan on the sitar and sarod, respectively, that are almost divine. Similarly, Ustad Bismillah Khan and Pandit VG Jog on the shehnai and violin played to rapturous audiences. There are countless

It was this kind of 'jugalbandi' that made the Nehru-Patel jodi so special but later, once personal ambition became more important than loyalty to the party, a 'darbari' culture completely destroyed the Congress. Dynastic politics is in a large measure responsible for a similar decline in other parties as well, but working in tandem means working as a team, a way of operating that seems quite alien to our tradition. Today, it is each man, or woman, for himself and when that person declines, sadly so does the party.

Topsy pudding — NDA's dessert storm

MILITARY MATTERS

BRIG SANDEEP THAPAR (RETD)

The mouth-watering preparation is imprinted on every ex-Academy officer's mind because it is associated with a lot of events, and stories

ASK any Army officer who has come up the National Defence Academy route about two things he instinctively remembers about NDA. In majority of the cases, the first will be the name and antics of the strictest Directing Staff. The second, and I am about 99 per cent sure on this, will be tipsy pudding!

Topsy is a mouth-watering dessert which basically mixes sponge cake and chopped seasonal fruits (apples, bananas, grapes, pomegranate, pears) in a custard base, topped with whipped cream and dry fruits. It is simple to prepare and delicious. This pudding is imprinted on every ex-NDA officer's mind because it is associated with a lot of events (and stories).

Topsy was not your everyday pudding, it was made only on occasions like the Academy Dinner night and campfires. Generous helpings were catered for or else the seniors would corner the bulk. And yes, the name is misleading. Topsy pudding does not have alcohol — my wife did try making it with a rum cake, but the taste was not the same!

In NDA, there are three outdoor training camps, one each in the second, fourth and sixth terms. These are of three to five days' duration and culminate into a run back, which is an inter-squadron competition. A night prior is the campfire dinner in which tipsy pudding is a must. In my second term camp, a senior surreptitiously visited our location (since camps are held in the same areas each year, the locations are known), simply to savour tipsy. The fact that he knew fully well that if caught he could be relegated (demoted by six months) was inconsequential for him! He simply walked over 20 km for the love of a pudding! There is a tradition, too. In the fourth-term Camp Rover, which is held in the rolling hills overlooking the NDA campus, squadron Senior Cadet Captains (SCCs) come to the campfire, ostensibly to motivate their squadron teams to do well in the run back to the Academy the following morning. In actuality, most come to pack tipsy pudding (as much as they can) for comrades back in the squadron.

There are a lot of unsavoury tales also linked to the tipsy, the most common being about some cadets eating copious quantities on campfire night and delaying their squadron teams in the run back due to runny tummies. But our course's story takes the cake, literally. It involves a particular second battalion squadron.

In camps, tipsy pudding was given to each squadron quarter master in rectangular pans of about 4 feet by 2 feet (with 4 inches high pudding layer). This was more than adequate for 25-odd cadets. Of course, as a tradition, a large helping was sent back to the squadron with the SCC. Now the participants had eaten their share and the pan contained the remainder tipsy to be sent for squadron sixth termers, when Cadet LVR, with his mucky size 11 DMS boot, accidentally stepped into the pan, leaving his footprint mark right in the centre. It was a well-known fact that non-provision of tipsy for the sixth termers could turn the week after return to the Academy a very miserable one. So, after a quick collective brainstorming session, the pudding was rearranged, with the visible effects of LVR's footprints removed and the balance concoction, which had considerably reduced in quantity, vigorously stirred and packed. The fact that the squadron fared badly in the run back resulted in curtailment of some privileges in the weeks thereafter. The limited quantity of tipsy was also understood to be a contributing factor.

Tailpiece: Topsy pudding is banned in my house. It has less to do with my bulging mid-section and more to my insistence that it be the default dessert in most dinners we host. No matter what recipe my wife adopted, her pudding never matched the NDA's and I would foolishly tell her that! Then one day, she swore never to make it.

Of an unsuitable girl and other inanities taking firm hold

MY TAKE

RAHUL SINGH

There will always be fundamentalists and hardliners around. But let us at least marginalise them as much as possible, and keep them on the fringes, not in the mainstream AMADNESS is sweeping over our magnificently diverse nation, shaking its very foundations. It's a weird, dehumanising and divisive phenomenon that should disturb all of us who value decency, compassion, equality and an inclusive society. The first sign was a lifting and uplifting jewellery TV ad celebrating happiness and communal harmony. In it, a Hindu girl was being welcomed on Diwali to the Muslim household of her husband. Her mother-in-law adorned her with a Diwali gift, a gold necklace. Pleased but mildly surprised, the girl says, "But I did not think you observed such customs." "Our custom is to bring happiness to you," the mother-in-law replies, smiling.

A lovely and heart-warming exchange, celebrating an inter-faith union. But not, it seems, for some Hindu hardliners who have only hatred and violence on their mind. Their protests compelled hasty withdrawal of the ad. A pity, but one supposes commercial considerations come first for any corporate house, even one of the largest and most-respected. Freedom of expression takes only second place. Soon after, an excellent film series directed by a

Padma Bhushan awardee, Mira Nair — one of whose films "Salaam Bombay" had been nominated for an Oscar — was the object of ire of the same kind of toxic characters. The series was based on a critically-acclaimed novel, "A Suitable Boy", by Vikram Seth. He is a Padma Shri awardee and his mother, Leila Seth, was the first woman judge to be appointed Chief Justice of the High Court of an Indian state, Himachal Pradesh. What was found objectionable? A scene in which a Hindu girl kisses a Muslim boy, with a temple in the background. Both are adults and in love with each other. Note that, again, it is a Muslim boy and a Hindu girl. If it had been the other way round, a Muslim girl and a Hindu boy, those hardliners who evidently don't believe in the concept of love would not have minded, thereby displaying their misogyny, which the dictionary defines as "hatred of women". Two senior officials working for streaming service Netflix have been asked for an explanation by the police. Explain what exactly? That Hindus and Muslims cannot be intimate, especially if the girl is a Hindu and the boy a Muslim? And if explanations are called for, why don't the police summon Nair and Seth? Nair, incidentally, is married to an Indo-Ugandan Muslim, perhaps another red flag for this hatred-filled lot.

Worse has followed in the same communal vein. Four states ruled by the Bharatiya Janata Party, namely Haryana, Karnataka, Madhya Pradesh and UP, have indicated that they intend to bring in a law to prevent "forcible" inter-faith marriages. The fact that it is labelled as "love jihad" clearly indicates that it is only targeting Muslims. In fact, UP has already come up with an ordinance, under which those convicted face long terms of imprisonment, up to 10 years, and a hefty fine. The government spokesperson, Sidharth Nath Singh, said disingenuously that the ordinance was "necessary to ensure justice for women, especially from SC/ST categories". Few people will be taken in by that. The reality is that it is only Muslims who are being singled out. Another provision says that for "willing conversions", the district magistrate has to be notified two months in advance. This would give goons plenty of time to put pressure on anybody planning to convert and get married.

Fortunately, the Allahabad High Court has come to the rescue. Almost at the same time as the malevolent ordinance, the High Court said, "The right to choose a partner, irrespective of caste, creed or religion, is inherent under the right to life and personal liberty, an integral part of the Fundamental Right, under Article 21."

The HC was ruling on a petition by a Muslim man and his wife, who had converted from Hinduism, against a complaint by her father. It went on to say, "We do not see them as Muslim and Hindu, rather as two grown-up individuals, who out of their own free will and choice are living together peacefully and happily.... interference in a personal relationship would constitute a serious encroachment into the right to freedom of choice." In other words, the UP ordinance is unconstitutional and highly divisive.

The Delhi High Court followed this up with a similar judgment, in which it stated that an adult woman was free to live wherever and with whoever she wished. It related to a 20-year-old Hindu woman who had left her family, to join her husband. The family, who tried forcibly to get her back, was warned "not to take the law into their hands or threaten the couple". Hopefully, these two powerful judgments will make the UP authorities withdraw their ordinance and restrain the other BJP-ruled states. Otherwise, the Supreme Court will need to step in.

Let me end with another instance, not of dividing Hindus and Muslims, but of a different kind of toxicity, a foolish one meant to garner publicity. In Mumbai, a Shiv Sena legislator, one Nitin Nandgaonkar, objected to a store which has called itself for decades "Karachi Sweets". Fearing violence, the owner covered up the signboard with newspapers. The legislator was clearly attempting to show his "nationalism" against the "enemy", Pakistan. But isn't China also a foe these days? So, why not close down all Chinese restaurants?

If there is a "tukde tukde gang" around, characters like Yogi Adityanath and Nitin Nandgaonkar clearly belong to it. They are the true dividers who don't believe in "unity in diversity". There will always be fundamentalists and hardliners around in any society. But let us at least marginalise them as much as possible, and keep them on the fringes, not in the mainstream.

chief Chirag Paswan led an acrimonious campaign against him in the recent Assembly elections in which JD(U) suffered major losses.

The former Bihar Deputy

CM, who shares a good rapport with Nitish Kumar, is believed to be among top runners for several vacancies in the Narendra Modi Cabinet for which names of several leaders, including Jyotiraditya Scindia, are doing the rounds.

Apparently, the LJP wanted the seat for Reena Paswan, wife of Ram Vilas Paswan. It now remains to be seen if the LJP, which continues to be a part of the NDA at the Centre, is given any assignment in the Narendra Modi Cabinet. After the exit of the Shiv Sena and the Akali Dal, Ramdas Athawale of the Republican Party of India (Athawale) is the only NDA ally in the Central council of ministers.

The seat had fallen vacant following the death of LJP patriarch Ram Vilas Paswan, who was a Cabinet minister in the Modi government. With the LJP out of Bihar NDA after its decision to contest separately, the BJP's decision to reclaim the seat has put a question mark on the future of Chirag Paswan.

Ram Vilas Paswan was elected to the Upper House by the NDA under the 'seat-sharing formula' finalised during the 2019 Lok Sabha polls by three parties.

STOP MISLEADING FARMERS

■ There is nothing that cannot be resolved through talks. The Congress should stop politicising the protest and misleading farmers.

Narendra Tomar, AGRICULTURE MINISTER

"It is clear by now from the fact that farmers from Haryana, Uttar Pradesh, Uttarakhand and Madhya Pradesh are attempting to go to Delhi that the resistance is pan-India. Agitations are underway in Odisha, Tamil Nadu, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Karnataka, Telangana, Andhra Pradesh and Jharkhand," said AIKSCC's Samyukt Kisan Movement.

Meanwhile, leaders from other states and organisations countered the "general belief" that the "protest is mainly Punjab-centric". The government had extended invitation for December 3 talks only to Punjab farmer unions, pretending and arguing that other farmers are happy with their reform.

Either the government should give an assurance that it will take back the farm laws or promise to enact the fourth one on MSP appears to be the common consensus among various groups.

Agriculture Minister Narendra Singh Tomar again appealed to farmers to stop the agitation and come for talks on December 3. "There is nothing that cannot be resolved through talks," Tomar said, asking the Congress to "stop politicising the protest and misleading the farmers."

Facing criticism over their handling of the situation, the Centre is also under attack for "underestimating the determination and resolve of Punjab farmers reached Delhi who despite so many hurdles".

"It is not just the movement of Punjab farmers. The entire nation is watching. The ball is in the Centre's court now. It is a remarkable movement which is not driven by religion or politics," agriculture expert Devinder Sharma said.

the accused, it said.

However, the top court said, "The High Court must exercise its power with caution and circumspection, cognisant of the fact that this jurisdiction is not a ready substitute for recourse to the remedy of bail under Section 439 of the CrPC."

It criticised the Bombay High Court for abdicating its role, functions and jurisdiction while denying bail to the TV news anchor.
