Sitharaman hints at more reforms

- Says will lay path for India to be among top economies

FE BUREAU
New Delhi, February 13

UNDETERRED BY RISKS posed by the Covid-19 pandemic, the government has been undertaking reforms to ensure a sustained long-term growth path for the country, finance minister Nirmala Sitharaman said on Saturday, indicating that more reforms will be pursued going ahead.

Replying to a debate in the Lok Sabha, the minister said the Budget for FY22, with its enhanced allocation for capex, healthcare and the development of agriculture infrastructure, has set the stage for India to become self-reliant. It focused on sectors with high multiplier effect on the economy. "...reforms are going to lay a path for India to be one of the top economies of the world in the coming decades," Sitharaman said.

Not only sedans, compact sedans also lose speed

- Sub-4 metre sedan sales have halved since 2015

VIKRAM CHAUDHARY
New Delhi, February 13

THE SUB-4 METRE sedan is a segment unique to India — it was born out of a 2006 legislation that allowed cars under 4 metres in length to qualify for lower excise duty. Quick to exploit Indians' craze for sedans at the time, Tata Motors chopped off the Indigo, and thus was born the Indigo CS (compact sedan), India's first sub-4 metre sedan. Soon, Maruti Suzuki made the segment popular with the Swift Dzire, and global carmakers jumped in, from Hyundai (Xcent, Aura) to Honda (Amaze) and from Ford (Aspire) to Volkswagen (Ameo). However, from the peak of 4,56,551 units sold in CY2015, sub-4 metre sedan sales dropped to just 2,13,874 units in CY2020.

OIL AND NATURAL Gas Corporation (ONGC) reported a profit of ₹3,763.5 crore on a consolidated basis for the quarter ended December, 31.1% less than the profit made in the same period a year ago, mainly on the state-run oil and gas producing company's lower crude price realisation and under-recoveries in the gas business. The company's board, on Saturday, has approved creation of new subsidiary for marketing and trading natural gas. The board has also decided to pay an interim dividend of ₹1.75 on each equity share of ₹5.

ByteDance in talks to sell Indian TikTok assets

February 13

BYTEDANCE LTD IS said to be exploring a sale of the India operations of TikTok to rival unicorn Glance, in an attempt to resuscitate the once-thriving short video sharing app that's been banned indefinitely in the country.

The discussions have been initiated by Japan's SoftBank conglomerate, according to people familiar with the talks, who declined to be identified because the talks are private as well as early and complex. SoftBank is a backer of Glance's parent, ByteDance.

SoftBank and ByteDance didn't respond to emails seeking comment outside of business hours. A Glance spokesman declined to comment.

If the talks progress, the Indian government will insist that user data and technology of TikTok stay within its borders, said the people familiar.

OF THE TOP nine posts on Bollywood actor Sonu Sood's Instagram feed, seven are photos or videos on behalf of brands. In comparison, for leading actor Ranveer Singh, only three out of the top nine posts link to brands.

A simplistic comparison as it maybe, it is a testament to the popularity of Sood as a brand ambassador. His efforts to help migrants and needy sections of society during the pandemic have made several brands sit up and take note, roping him as an endorser in 2020 and 2021.

Automotive brands like Jeep, laundry detergent brand Woosh, maker of personal computers Acer and most recently, leading smartphone manufacturer

Xiaomi, have leveraged Sood for the goodwill he has earned over the past year to promote their brands. His endorsement kitty has grown fatter, including brands like Spice Money, Shyam Steel, Lenskart, Oyo, ISM

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2021

ON THE DAY in 1970 when the Supreme Court struck down the Executive Order withdrawing privy purses given to former rulers of princely states, another young advocate and I joined the Youth Congress in Tamil Nadu. We joined by being part of a Youth Congress-organised protest against the judgment near the statue of Lord Munro in Chennai. We were arrested and released shortly afterwards. When privy purses were finally abolished by an amendment to the Constitution, we believed that our protest (and arrest) had led to the amendment and we had been vindicated!

Our protest was a dissent to the judgment of the Supreme Court. There were similar protests at many places in the country. The Supreme Court did not haul us for contempt of court; no one labelled us as anti-national; and no police agency charged us with sedition. Bless them.

The nature of dissent

A dissident mind belongs to a thinking person. Great judges have been great dissenters: Justice Frankfurter, Justice Subba Rao, Justice H R Khanna and others. The dissenting judge, sometimes joined by other judges on the Bench, writes a minority judgment that was described as "an appeal to the brooding spirit of the law, to the intelligence of a future day". In the field of sports, dissent is expressed by raising a clenched fist. In a business enterprise, dissent takes the form of work-to-rule or a strike.

In politics and public life, dissent is expressed as a protest. Some protests garner widespread support and become an agitation, sometimes drawing thousands into the agitation. All 'agitationists' are passionate about the 'cause', many are willing to suffer and make sacrifices, few are selfish, and only a handful formulate the strategy. The last-named are the andolanjeevi, christened as such and denounced by the Prime Minister on February 8 while speaking in the Rajya Sabha.

The great agitator

The quintessential andolanjeevi in the first half of the 20th century was, without question, Mahatma Gandhi. He instinctively picked the right causes — indigo cultivation and salt tax. He was a wordsmith and invested words with powerful messages — satyagraha and Quit India. He believed in the power of symbols — a fistful of salt and khadi (hand-spun and hand-woven) clothing. He forged new weapons in the struggle for Independence — indefinite fasting and Dandi Yatra. He used soft power — bhajans and prayer meetings. A lot of thought must have gone into crafting and leading the struggle for Independence. He was the original andolanjeevi; we are proud to call him the Father of the Nation.

Dissent has shaped the history of nations, dissent has given birth to new religions, dissent has liberated millions of people. Lenin revolted against the provisional government installed after Tsar Nicholas II had abdicated, and the first Communist nation was born. Siddhartha Gautama, Martin Luther and Guru Nanak dissented from the religious order in which they were born and founded a new reformist religious order. To them we owe the birth of Buddhism, Protestantism and Sikhism. Martin Luther King Jr's dissent on the prevailing social order — and the movement that sprung from his dissent — liberated millions of black Americans, something that a civil war could not do. His passionate cry "I have a dream" was an appeal to the conscience of Americans.

There were at least three watershed years in India in the first half of the twentieth century: 1920, 1930 and 1942. Each one of the years was marked by a nationwide agitation that seamlessly became a movement and transformed into a struggle for freedom. The non-cooperation movement evolved into the civil disobedience movement and culminated in the Quit India movement, which was the final blow to the imperial power of Britain. The true meaning of andolan is not 'agitation' but 'movement'.

There are examples of agitations evolving into people's movements in other countries as well. The anti-Vietnam war protests that exploded on university campuses across the United States (1968) exposed the lies of the US government and, in a few years, the US beat a humiliating retreat from South Vietnam, that led to a united Vietnam. Some movements — the Velvet Revolution and the Romanian Revolution (both 1989) — succeeded in overthrowing longstanding authoritarian regimes (Czechoslovakia, Romania). Some like Arab Spring in Egypt failed (2011). The enduring lesson of these movements is that the human spirit that seeks a change for the better can never be suppressed forever.

Freedom will prevail

There is an interesting correlation between citizens' political rights/civil liberties and press freedom. A country that ranks higher in terms of citizens' rights will also have a better press freedom score. The conclusion is logical because it is the media that reflects and

CM Palaniswami gives away certificates to nine farmers

On February 5, CM K Palaniswami had announced waiver of ₹12,110.74-cr crop loans availed by 16,43,347 farmers from cooperative banks

PRESS TRUST OF INDIA

Chennai, February 13

MARKING THE ROLL-OUT of the ₹12,110-cr crop loan waiver scheme for over 1.6 lakh ryots in Tamil Nadu, chief minister K Palaniswami on Saturday gave away certificates to nine farmers here.

The certificates state that loans taken from cooperative banks and due on January 31, 2021, have been waived.

The move was considering damage to crops following back-to-back cyclones 'Nivar' and 'Burevi' last year, besides the heavy unseasonal rainfall.

The waiver would pave the way for farmers to continue cultivation without any hassles, Palaniswami had said. Following the announcement, government orders were issued on February 8, setting the stage for the scheme's implementation.

LUXINDUSTRIES, ONE of India's largest hosiery producer and exporter announced its unaudited financial results for the quarter and nine months ended December 31, 2020. With the inner wear industry constantly evolving, Lux Industries has offered differentiated products in the market by undertaking breakthrough marketing and brand promotion activities.

Commenting on the results, Pradip Kumar Todi, MD, said, "The company has reported the highest ever quarterly revenue and fared well across all parameters with an overall strong rural and semi-urban demand. Ebitda has shown record growth and stands at ₹80.2 crore, while PAT stands at ₹55.1 crore, respectively, for Q3 FY21. to such workers and their dependents who are insured beneficiaries of the ESI Act in Maharashtra. With hassle-free procedures, this convergence is expected to provide doorstep access of medical facilities to the beneficiaries.

"It has been our longstanding aim to provide doorstep delivery of medical care services in Maharashtra and this is a positive step in that direction. This convergence is going to bolster the medical infrastructure available for 1.77 crore ESIC beneficiaries in Maharashtra," said Pranay Sinha, additional commissioner and regional director of ESIC for Maharashtra.

The tie-up with PM-JAY was initially implemented on a pilot basis in Maharashtra in the district of Ahmednagar and now has been extended to the entire state sans the south Mumbai region, Pune and Kolhapur districts.

This implies that in addition to the hospitals already empanelled by ESIC in the state, a broad network of 807 PMJAY empanelled hospitals would now be available to provide medical care

FB's Oversight Board takes up new case from India: Facebook's Oversight Board has taken up a new case related to a user's post that was shared from a Punjabi-language online platform and contained insinuations against Rashtriya Swayamseva Sangh (RSS) and PM Narendra Modi. While the post was initially taken down for violating Facebook's community guidelines, the social media company later restored the content.

The Oversight Board is an independent body set up by Facebook last year to look into hate speech and other undesirable content on the platform.

DISASTER
Bill Gates
Penguin
Random House

While one can read a million articles about it and the story is well documented, the author still does justice in bringing out the details of the company

his meeting with Neumann, where he describes Neumann as this larger-than-life unicorn founder (who isn't?) with a cult-like personality trying to throw obscure ideas at him. The man is depicted as creating and spreading his own legend. That doesn't deter Weideman in capturing his eccentricities and presenting his own view of the situation. But the author is careful of not letting go of the plot too early. Weideman carefully builds his narrative with 24 succinct chapters detailing every aspect of Neumann's life and excesses and how the money supported him and let him use company resources for his whims and fancies.

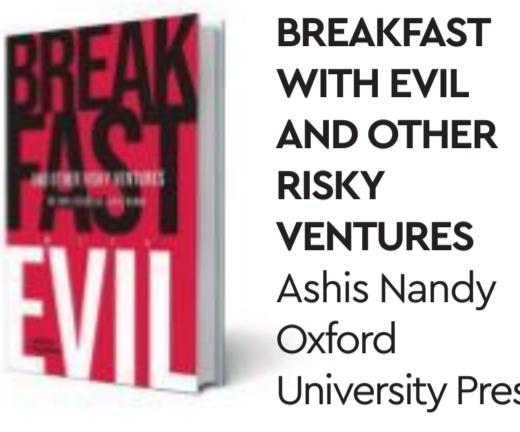

While the focus is certainly Adam Neumann, Weideman does not lose sight of the story of WeWork. He details the life of Neumann's wife, Rebekah, who started a school WEGrow, signing admission certificates with her name and a heart. He describes the lavish parties and Adam Neumann's incessant desire to maintain a billionaire's lifestyle and the corporate money's desire to sustain this dream. In one instance, Weideman, describes how this tech-enabled startup was at one point of time managed by a high school kid from Queens. He also deconstructs the farce of a capitalist kibbutz that Neumann spun to distinguish himself, his company and philosophy from other landlords. And, of course, gives us a peek into the mind of Neumann, pouring words that at best mean nothing, aptly representative of today's times.

While some of the instances do get repetitive, that is not Weideman's fault, as he is just detailing what happened and how it transpired. WeWork has since undergone a turnaround, and although the pandemic would deal a blow to the company's fortunes, it would not quench the thirst of capitalists to invest on more such Neumann-styled founders. The market may still not have learnt its lesson, because everything gets whitewashed after a Twitter tirade or a turnaround story.

not exist. And, the latest on the block is WeWork, where again excesses defined a multi-billion dollar startup, which ultimately collapsed under the weight of its own clichés and desires. Change, the superpower that its co-founder Adam Neumann asserted he possessed, came and destroyed the startup, which was little understood and yet revered.

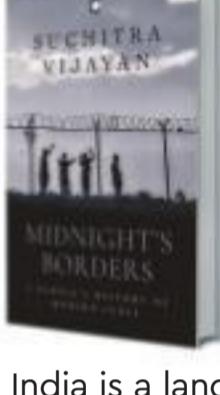

While one can read a million articles about it and the story is well documented, Reeves Weideman still does justice in bringing out the details of the company leading to Neumann's exit. Billion Dollar Loser is written carefully and meticulously, devoid of any drama or hype, and thus details the life of Neumann in a careful and calibrated manner.

India is a land of borders, its peripheries nesting against seven countries. Over seven years, across 9,000 miles, Suchitra Vijayan travelled these borderlands. The more she travelled, the clearer it became to her that local history and memory bear no resemblance to the political history of the nation that claims these lands and peoples. Vijayan's reportage provides a re-examination of the idea of territorial sovereignty.

NIN 2008, WHEN the crisis struck, one of the easiest explanations was that some bankers took the money, injected it with steroids, gave it fancy names, and ultimately this crazy money led to the near downfall of the markets. What is not discussed, however, is how this crazy money came about and what has been done to curb this phenomenon. While Marxists would claim that the system is beset with bubbles and crashes, and the intensity is only set to increase with time as internal contradictions in the capitalist framework move us towards a revolution, what they did not portend was that the system would go blind in pursuit of nothing. The last decade has been a story of both successes as failures, but more important it has been a story of excesses.

The bigger the ego of the founder, the more money he/she can command. Nothing exemplifies this better than the story of Theranos, where investors kept pumping in money for a dream that did ates a sense of levity as people get to interact with one another before the serious discussions and are able to cross barriers that may have otherwise existed. Here the authors warn that such things should not be predictable, or they lose their essence. For example, it is not a great idea to say that you are telling a joke and fail to live up to the promise. The authors warn also of the proper and not so proper things to say and the remedial action to be taken when there are faux pas made.

It is also true, argue the authors, that most CEOs prefer to hire people with a sense of humour as it is perceived that funny employees do a better job. It makes people confident and strengthens relationships and boosts resilience in difficult times. Therefore, organisations must try to build a spirit of levity while making sure that it does not come in the way of work. In India, too, it is seen that the new-age companies, which started off in the IT space and now cover all the startups and younger organisations, have an informal culture which breaks barriers and creates a lighter working environment. We have heard of such cultures in advertising even in the Seventies and Eighties where age and hierarchy does not matter when there are professional interactions. Levity just makes things easier for all concerned.

The authors talk of four basic issues in this context. The first is how humour enhances creativity and problem solving. It encourages a kind of mental gymnastics that reveal connections and patterns which we could have missed. Second, it can be used to influence and motivate others. It has hence a percolation effect, especially when it starts from the top and spreads through the organisation.

Third it builds bonds and defuses tensions in tough times. This is not to say that we should be laughing all the time, but building trustful relations in an informal working culture fosters a different kind of resilience for bad times. Last it creates a culture where colleagues feel safe and joyful. It widens our perspectives and makes us feel psychologically safe and creates fertile ground for creativity to thrive.

Now being funny involves some degrees of exaggeration and spontaneity. These may not be inherent in our persona and may have to be cultivated, as all do not have this knack. This can happen in the language we use and often bosses who are self-deprecating strike the right

No laughing matter

A little bit of humour can go a long way in building better relations in the workplace too notes with their colleagues.

Now humour helps to set the tone not just in an organisation but also in diplomacy, and here the authors do show that issues will remain unsolved even the USA and Russia can have lighter moments when negotiating, which makes the exercise of disagreement friendlier. The example of Madeline Albright is given where she was able to break the ice with humour even though she had the reputation of being the toughest and most uncompromising negotiator.

Further, as such a culture starts from the top the onus is really on the leaders to set the tone. How do they do so without compromising their authority? This is not easy because colleagues need to know who the boss is and ensure that rules are followed, and business objectives are met. They give examples of Warren Buffet, who is known to be self-deprecating, which makes his colleagues feel at ease while at the same time they know that they have to deliver. For example, forgiving errors with a touch of humour conveys the message that there is a fault without being critical. This is a way of not scaring employees.

This is clearly a book for leaders or those aspiring to be at the top. It always starts at the top and once established, can flow through the veins of the organisation quite swiftly. Indian CEOs need to take cues from this book. We have read about those at the top ruling by spreading fear and threats. Eccentricities have varied from being abusive to throwing papers and asking people to resign. Aaker and Bagdonas show that there are better ways of running a company for sure.

REYA MEHROTRA

FORMER MISS WORLD and actor Priyanka Chopra Jonas created ripples when she announced her memoir titled Unfinished. Published by Penguin Random House, the unconventional title hints at the fact that Chopra has many more story-worthy years to live.

Interestingly, the title also points to another trend in publishing: of global figures choosing to tell their stories long before their sunset years. Chopra is the latest entrant in that club, which includes former US president Barack Obama (A Promised Land, 2020), Dreams From My Father, 1995, The Audacity of Hope: Thoughts on Reclaiming the American Dream, 2006), Soha Ali Khan (The Perils of Being Moderately Famous, 2017), Maya Angelou (I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings, 1969), Michelle Obama (Becoming, 2018) and Malala Yousafzai (I Am Malala: The Story of the Girl Who Stood Up for Education and was Shot By the Taliban, 2013).

No age limit

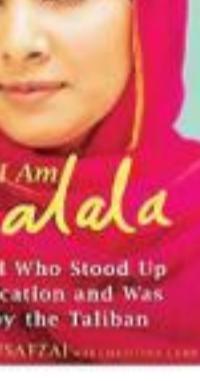

A number of influential people across professions and around the globe have in recent years penned down their tell-all tales—some of them as young as Pakistani activist Malala Yousafzai and climate change activist Greta Thunberg (Scenes From the Heart, a 2018 autobiographical book, which she co-wrote with her mother, father and sister) who wrote their stories in their teenage years. Editors at leading publishing houses say that as long as the story has meat and piques the curiosity of fans and readers, age is no bar to write an autobiography. Kishore Mehta, managing director of Rupa & Co, believes an interesting life needs to be captured irrespective of the timing or the age and that it will be of interest to the reader.

Every autobiography, even though written early on in life, has a purpose, feels Nandini Mehta, non-fiction editor at Juggernaut Books, which recently published Tahira Kashyap Khurana's memoir The 12 Commandments of Being a Woman (2020). "It depends on the story you have to tell and how compelling it is," she adds.

Mehta is right and the success of such autobiographies points to readers' interest in the lives of their icons, however young they may be. In fact, almost every profession in the public eye has a string of such memoirs. In sports, tennis star Sania Mirza's autobiography Ace Against Odds (2016) made for an inspiring read for youngsters, badminton champion Saina Nehwal's Playing to Win: My Life On & Off Court (2012) exposed the shy sportsperson to the world, ace cricketer Sachin Tendulkar's Playing It My Way (2014) was an instant hit and so was Sourav Ganguly's A Century is Not Enough (2018), as well as memoirs penned by boxer Mary Kom, cricketers Yuvraj Singh and Kapil Dev, and sprinter Milkha Singh. When it comes to Bollywood, Chopra's memoir isn't the only one, as there have been several others, including Rishi Kapoor's Khullam Khulla: Rishi Kapoor Uncensored (2017) and Karan Johar's An Unsuitable Boy (2016).

When it comes to politics, though, such autobiographies are more common abroad than in India. Kamala Harris's The

VAISHALI DAR

IN SEPTEMBER LAST YEAR, Thomson Reuters announced that it will be giving its employees a Mental Health Day Off on October 9 as a permanent company holiday every year. "If there's one thing 2020 has taught us, it's the value of having the mind-space to deal with the unexpected," Steve Hasker, president and CEO of Thomson Reuters, said in a global message to employees.

The move is a brilliant reminder to embed well-being in the workplace culture at a time when professionals are burdened under break-less hours of remote work, never-ending screen time and exhaustion, which are all leading to mental fatigue. Burnout is characterised by three key factors: feelings of energy depletion or exhaustion; increased mental distance from one's job, or feelings of negativity or cynicism related to one's job; and reduced professional efficacy, as per WHO. "Burnout has been reported to be the most common in organisations," says Achal Bhagat, senior consultant psychiatrist and psychotherapist, Apollo Hospitals, and chairperson, Saarthak, a mental health organisation in Delhi. "Burnout includes disillusionment with the response to stressful situations. Indecision, withdrawal, mental arguments, anger outbursts and lack of sense of accomplishment besides moral injury... these are a few well-recognised phenomena where the person may feel guilty for having to work against their personal code of conduct. Some of these features show signs of depression, low mood, helplessness and hopelessness. In this situation, organisations need to become points of delivery for mental health services. But solutions are sometimes 'tokenistic' and restricted to some events around mental health," he adds.

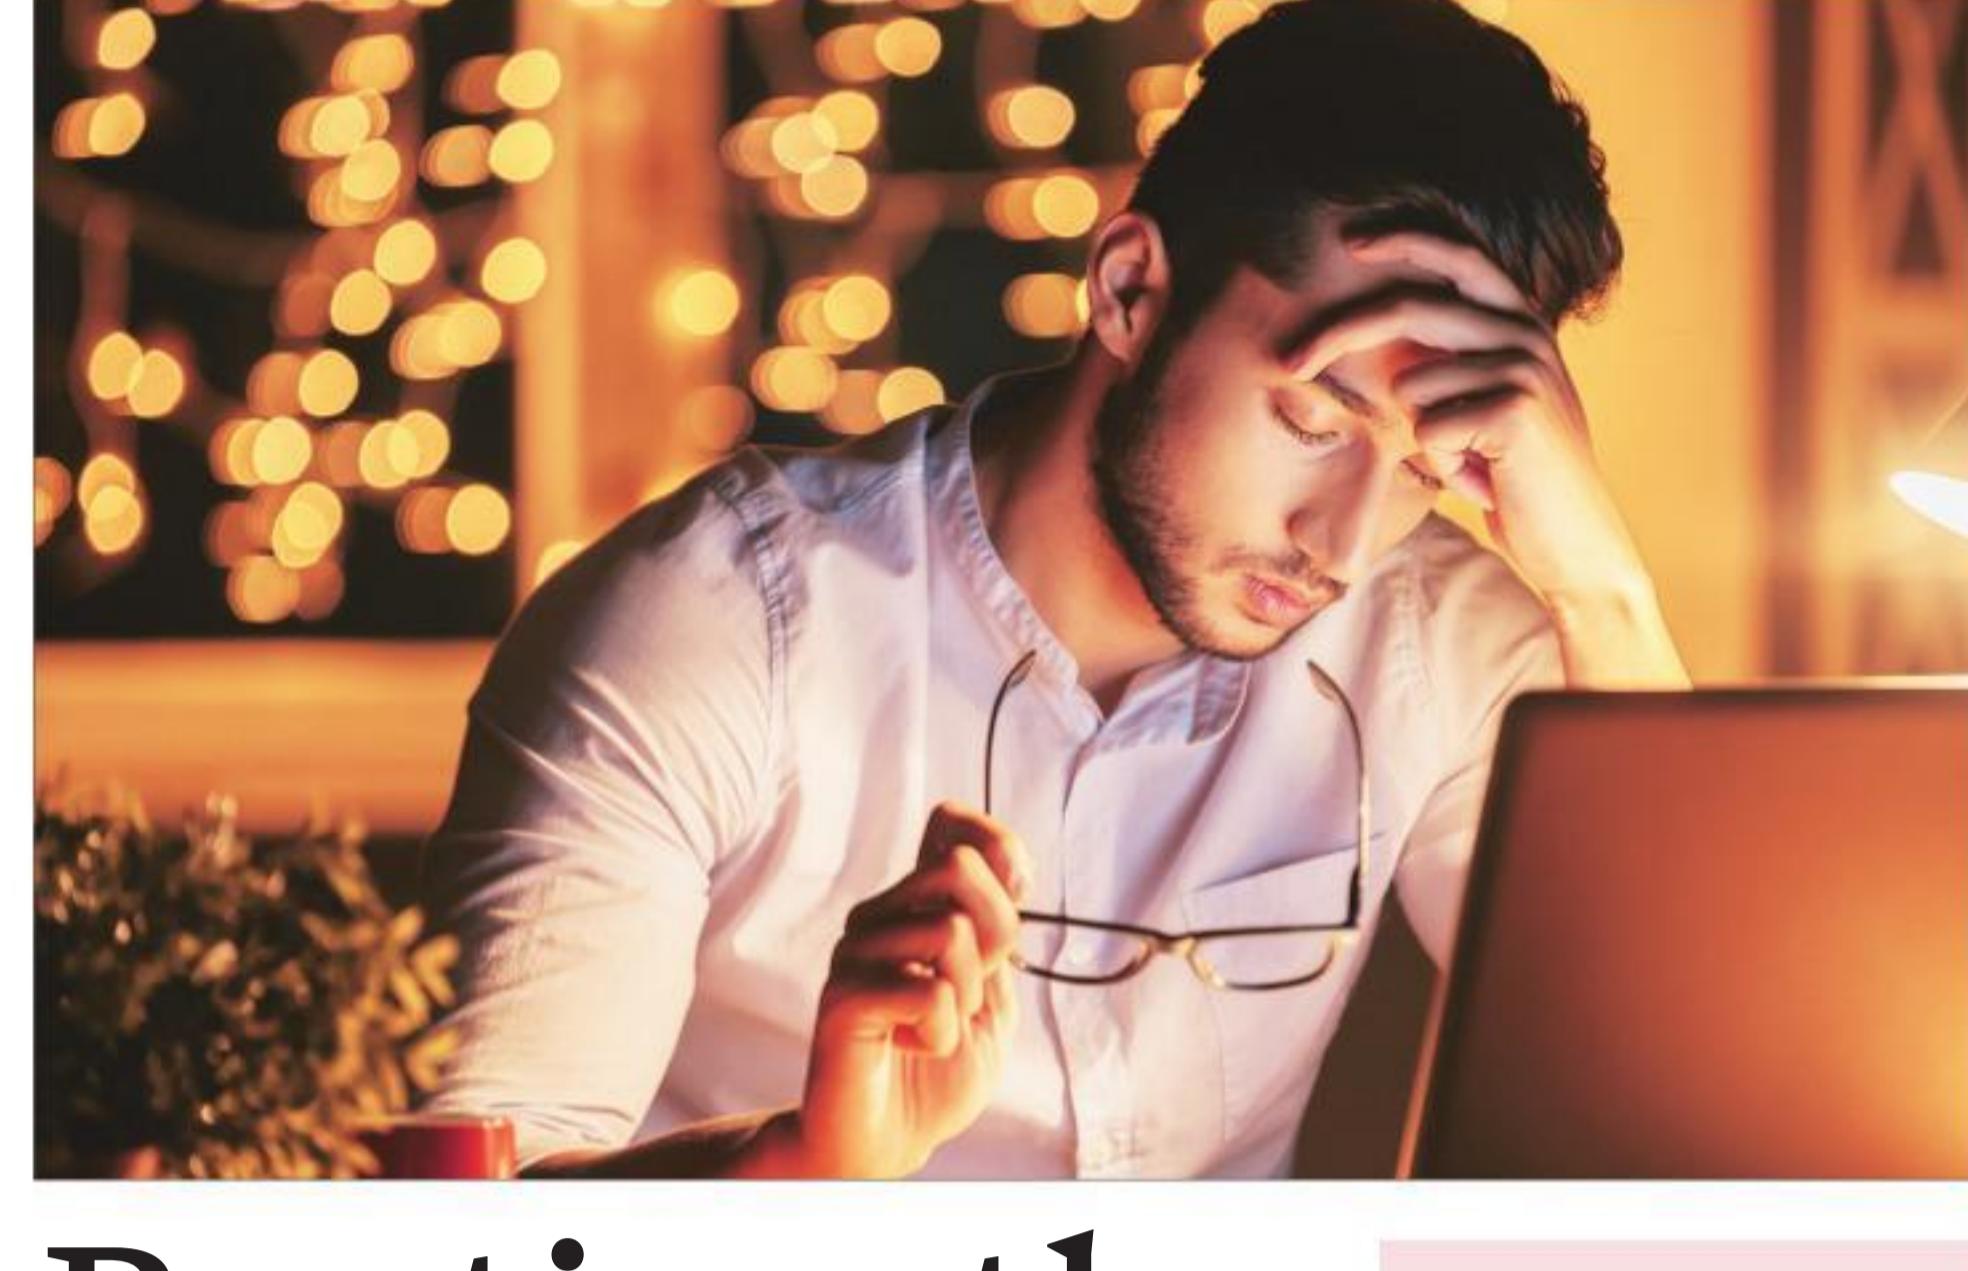

Bhagat recommends a comprehensive approach to mental health like programmes to mitigate stigma around mental health or awareness initiatives to support personal growth, peer support to create a fair and safe workplace, etc.

Curbing stress

As per Microsoft's October 2020 Work Trend Index report, close to one-third of workers in India cited increased rates of burnout in the crucial months of the lockdown. Surveying over 6,000 information and first-line workers across eight countries, including Australia, Japan, India and Singapore, the study found that India had the second-highest percentage (29%) of workers facing increased burnout in Asia. "The year 2020 led to the evolution of a new workplace—from a physical space to one residing in a virtual world. As businesses adapt to a new way of working, it is important to examine the multifaceted impact that the new working conditions are having on employees. This helps provide relevant solutions to all users," says Samik Roy, country head, modern work, Microsoft India.

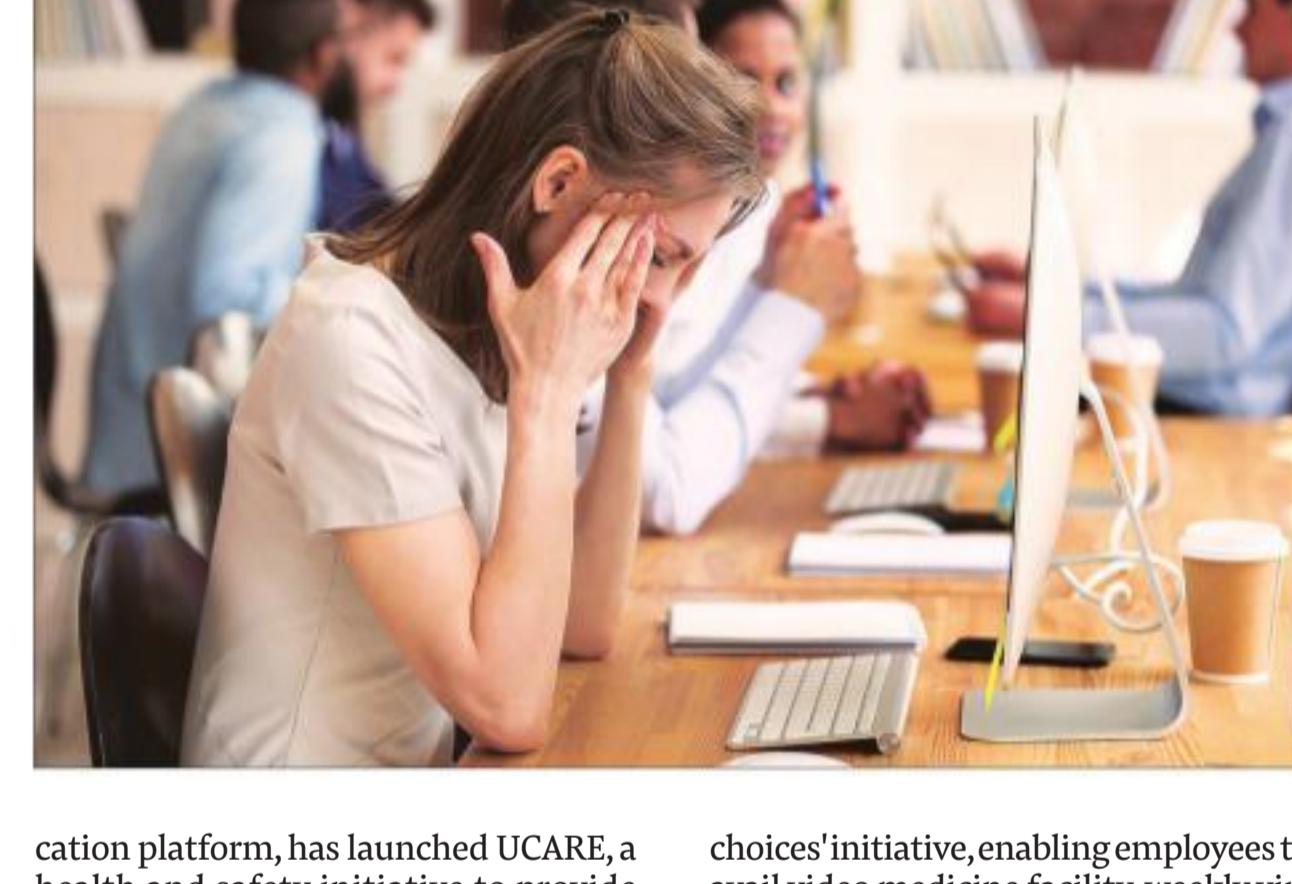

The need for work-life harmony and physical and mental health have made many organisations adopt activities and experiences to curb burnout in employees. "We started offering a Friday off in a month during the lockdown to all employees, enabling them to take a break and spend time with their families and switch off from work," says Bengaluru-based Shilpa Vaid, HR head at Prione Business Services group, a joint venture between Catamaran and Amazon to empower SMBs. "Employees are advised to schedule no meetings between 1 and 2 pm everyday and to not take any meetings post 7 pm and before 9 am on any day. We have started Employee Assistance Program to focus on the mental health of our employees and continue to drive awareness around significant issues related to anxiety, stress," she adds.

Similarly, fintech firm Razorpay offers wellness leaves, meeting-free days and mandates that employees schedule all meetings between 10 am and 7 pm during weekdays. Unacademy, an online education platform, has launched UCARE, a health and safety initiative to provide Covid-19-related relief and support to all its employees and their dependents.

Cisco has declared May 22 and June 19 as 'A Day for Me', wherein all employees globally can unplug, rest and recharge, and take some time for themselves and their loved ones. Another initiative #LifeOnWebex showcases how creatively employees are using Cisco Webex, with virtual pet or costume parties, posting pictures of WFH experience, etc. "We foster open dialogue between leaders and teams, weekly global check-ins with the executive leadership team, virtual workshops on mental and physical health, and fun sessions on Webex," says Anupam Trehan, director, people and communities, Cisco India & SAARC. Multinational retailer Marks & Spencer, too, has an enhanced suite of benefits under its 'My choices' initiative, enabling employees to avail video medicine facility, weekly virtual engagement initiatives and more.

At a time when most businesses are limping with declining margins, there is an overall level of dissatisfaction and demotivation among employees, and that needs to be paid attention to. Sanjay Kumar, MD and CEO of corporate catering company Elior India, says, "We try to seek less information from employees...not over-analyse or over-stress... We have reduced the number of reports, data points for each function to submit and focus on the bigger issues in terms of helping people make decisions by empowering them during remote working..." he says.

Then there is Thriving Mind, Salesforce's latest global benefit programme to help employees and their families strengthen their psychological and emotional health. It has been developed by

How to avoid fatigue

- A dialogue with employees helps, encouraging them to comfortably raise issues
- An employee, too, must improve communication with the reporting manager
- Increased team spirit and participation can provide emotional support

Plan your day

- Read, meditate or exercise
- Lunch breaks can include reading a book, going on a walk, or even staring into space
- Wrap up work before dinner and do not log back in later

Beating Covid stress

- Focus on your work, thoughts, actions or try a relaxation technique such as meditation
- Indulge in some self-care routine. Make time for an activity, dance or do yoga
- In such difficult times, loneliness is likely to happen. Do not judge yourself

Thrive Global in partnership with Stanford Medical. Additionally, Salesforce India has also extended WFH. "We have extended WFH for all employees until July 31, 2021, and given the option to comfortably do so even if office reopens, besides an additional $250 towards office equipment," says Deepa Narayan, senior director, employee success, Salesforce India.

This is a significant move, as an overwhelming majority of employees who started working from home immediately after Covid-19 outbreak and subsequent lockdowns would like to continue WFH, an ASSOCHAM-Primus Partners September 2020 survey pointed out. "The new normal is unfolding across different aspects of doing business. Technology has enabled WFH as a feasible proposition. While it is early days to assess how exactly things would pan out, remote working has its own opportunities and challenges. We need to adjust fast to this paradigm," says Deepak Sood, secretary general, ASSOCHAM.

Indians aren't the only people, however, to feel the pressure. Europeans have been under the pump too. "Based on aggregated survey data from countries across the European region, fatigue is measured in different ways, and levels vary per country... it is now estimated to have reached over 60% in some cases," says Hans Henri P Kluge, WHO regional director for Europe.

TYPES OF FATIGUE

There are three types of fatigue. Transient fatigue is acute fatigue because of extreme sleep restriction. Cumulative fatigue is caused by repeated mild sleep restriction and circadian fatigue refers to reduced performance during night time hours between 2 am and 6 am

Mumbai's much-admired Kala Ghoda Festival concludes today after a virtual edition of music, art, literature and a workshop on anxiety

FAIZAL KHAN

WHEN BRINDA MILLER, the honorary chairperson of the Kala Ghoda Association in Mumbai, launched the preparations for its eponymous arts festival this year, one of the first calls she placed was to a leading therapist in the city. "We wanted to have a session to help people deal with their anxiety," says Miller, an artist and a champion of public art in Mumbai.

With the megacity witnessing over three lakh Covid-19 cases and more than 11,000 deaths, the Kala Ghoda Association has stuck to the safety protocols for coronavirus this year by organising a virtual festival (viewed on www.kalaghodaassociation.com and www.kgaf2021.com) during February 6-14. Along with artists, musicians, writers and craftspeople, the festival programmers added a therapist to address the concerns of a community living under the shadow of a disaster for over a year.

"The association reached out to me asking if I would be interested in hosting a workshop on anxiety as part of the Kala Ghoda Festival," says Sonali Gupta, who practices clinical psychology in Mumbai. On the fifth day of the festival, which concludes today, Gupta was the host of an online workshop, titled Unlocking Anxiety that stretched to an hour.

"I am glad that a session on mental health is included in a mainstream event. The Kala Ghoda Festival is a big part of the city of Mumbai," adds Gupta, whose debut book, Overcome It and Live Without Fear, was published during the lockdown last year. In the well-attended workshop, Gupta talked to the participants from across the country about the experience during the pandemic, what anxiety looks like and how it manifests, and handled the myths around anxiety.

"In my personal work as a therapist, anxiety has topped the list during the pandemic," says Gupta, a therapist for over a decade-and-a-half. "People have been anxious about contracting the virus, losing jobs and their dear ones. Working from home is also a subject of anxiety for many. Even if you are living safely, we still have anxiety," adds Gupta. "Technology has also contributed to our anxiety. The last one year has also seen technology fatigue happening. Our phone is constantly buzzing," adds Gupta, who detailed research-based techniques about what people can do at an individual level to manage anxiety and shared with them a crowd-sourced list of therapists across the country created by her.

First held in 1999, the Kala Ghoda Festival is inspired by the Edinburgh Fringe Festival in Scotland, considered the world's largest arts festival. "We got the idea for an arts festival in Mumbai from the Edinburgh festival. While the visitors have to pay in Edinburgh, ours is a free festival," says Miller. Through its popular festival, the Kala Ghoda Association has been able to raise funds over the years for preserving south Mumbai art district's rich architectural heritage. Among heritage structures the association has helped preserve are the Bomanjee Hormusjee Wadia Clock Tower on Perin Nariman Street, and the Ruttonjee Muljee Jetha water fountain and Elphinstone College in Fort Mumbai.

Both the association and the festival derive their names from a statue erected in honour of King Edward VII, the Prince of Wales who visited Mumbai in 1875. "It was the statue of King Edward on a black horse. The statue became a landmark and the name Kala Ghoda stuck," says heritage evangelist Vinayak Talwar, who conducted a virtual walk around the Kala Ghoda precinct during the festival.

While the Edwardian statue was removed during the nationalist movement in Mumbai in the 1960s, the Kala Ghoda Association ensured a new bronze statue of a black horse (without King Edward this time) came up some 3 km from the original site two years ago. "Several statues of British princes were vandalised during the nationalist movement," says Talwar, whose virtual heritage walk was attended by nearly 400 people. The recently restored original statue is found today at the Dr Bhau Daji Lad Museum in Byculla.

The origins of south Mumbai art district date back to the foundation of the Bombay Arts Society in 1888 for promoting local artists. In 1939, the society opened a salon at the Ador House in Kala Ghoda that became a hub for artists who exhibited their works there. "This period saw the birth of the arts movement in Kala Ghoda area," says Talwar. The Ador House arts centre (it moved out two years ago) displayed the works of famous artists like MF Hussain, SH Raza, Gaitonde and FN Souza, all members of the Bombay Progressive Artists' Group formed in the 1940s. The Jehangir Art Gallery followed in 1952.

"We kept the arts district going during the pandemic by organising virtual talks twice a week," says Stukhnandan Vohra, who joined fellow heritage evangelist Pereena Lamba in conducting an online talk, Bombay Buffet: Food And The City, during the festival. "Food is part of our intangible heritage. We will lose our heritage if we don't talk about it," says Vohra.

Celebrating the good life

Few populations around the world know how to truly enjoy life like the Italians

BETWEEN SIPS

Magandeep Singh

IHAVE HAD the privilege of living across Europe for extended periods not merely as a passing tourist, but a resident with the same quotidian quandaries as the average local. What endows you with is a very real idea of what makes those people tick, their joys and sorrows, highs and lows.

Mytime in Italy, among various lessons, taught me this big one: few populations around the world know how to truly enjoy life like the Italians do. Of course, when I say Italians, I am generalising, but let's not get pedantic. La dolce vita is not just a cliché here—they not only know how to extract joy from every aspect of life, but know how to do it with a certain flair for the dramatic and extravagant. Food, fashion, fast cars, they don't just do things for subsistence, it all comes loaded with flavour. From a basic pasta recipe to a simple village wine, everything gets infused with a certain life-enriching shot of vivacity.

So when the Italian ambassador invited me for a socially-distanced World Pizza Day party, I knew we were in for a veritable treat. The evening itself was nothing ostentatious—it was just pizzas and Prosecco in the park with an Indo-Italian fusion concert for company—and yet in spite of all the distancing measures, it never once felt lacking in fun or interaction.

The traditional Neapolitan pizza is an art, one that was recently recognised by Unesco as a heritage unto itself, so now there are standards to be maintained if you wish to call one so. Thankfully, we have places in Delhi which will dish out a proper pie, which comes as close to the original as my Neapolitan-shouldered bespoke jackets do. Diva, Da Susy and Leo's—three go-to addresses spread across the NCR will have you covered for the real stuff.

These aren't pizzas which come loaded with another pizza-worth of toppings. It takes only 90 seconds to cook one in a traditional wood-fired oven, so don't pester about—stay there and watch it come together. The Italian chef at the JW Marriott Sahar in Mumbai once taught me that if you get thirsty after eating a pizza then it wasn't fermented right. This evening, I was thirsty for some good Prosecco, but for entirely different reasons.

And then, since it ain't an Italian party till we have ice cream, there was proper hand-churned all-natural gelato by Venezia Italian Artisan ice cream at hand. For a country that nearly tops the world's charts for ice cream consumption, the Italians have done to this humble cup what Giuseppe Verdi (and many before him) did to music. The creamy folds of a simple vanilla ice cream were sheer soothing joy post a pizza binge, but it was not all. Lavazza, the Italian coffee brand, had set up just besides, so a different kind of fusion entailed—one which involved pouring a shot of fresh espresso over a scoop of vanilla ice cream. The purity and simplicity of this is what makes it such an instant classic. It's called an affogato and it's equal parts dessert and caffè.

Sadly for me, all my time in Italy I possibly lived with a strange set of purists who never introduced me to this but, in their defence, they also protected me from ending up having a pizza with pineapple on it.

Back to this fabulous party in the park, I walked away still humming the bars of Con Te Partiro, the taste of prosciutto and parmesan still on the back of my palate, while coffee and creamy vanilla made up the more immediate linger. It was like getting to taste la dolce vita in the time of a pandemic. Grazie mille to His Excellency Vincenzo de Luca and the entire team at the Italian embassy who put this together.

Now, if someone could tell me if there is an upcoming World Pasta Day too...

STORIES AND TRENDS FROM INDIA AND AROUND THE WORLD THAT CAUGHT OUR FANCY

Amanda Gorman arrives at the 59th Presidential Inauguration at the US Capitol in Washington

Should you double mask?

Considering the effectiveness of masks, there has been a trend of wearing double or even triple masks. But do we really need two masks?

VAISHALI DAR

LAST MONTH, 22-YEAR-OLD Amanda Gorman, the first person to be named US National Youth Poet Laureate, took the world by storm when she delivered a powerful poem at the swearing-in ceremony of US President Joe Biden. There was another notable thing about her though. Her double mask. Wearing a gorgeous yellow coat and a bright-red headband from designer label Prada, Gorman wore a surgical mask beneath her bedazzled Prada version. In fact, not just her, one has often seen the US President, too, wearing a medical-grade mask underneath the black one. Top infectious disease expert Anthony Stephen Fauci, the director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases in the US and chief medical adviser to Biden, has also revealed that he often wears double masks.

Considering the effectiveness of masks, there has been a trend of late of wearing double or even triple masks to protect oneself. But do we really need two masks? Studies are yet to prove that wearing a double mask can protect one from the spread of germs from an infected person. During a White House Covid-19 briefing, Fauci said that although the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) has not yet outlined specific guidelines regarding the trend of wearing two masks to prevent the spread of the coronavirus, it could be the "common sense approach".

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, which recommends that people wear masks that have "two or more layers of washable, breathable fabric", face masks can block up to 70% of coronavirus particles.

Experts, too, feel that wearing double masks is a sign of a mature society. "(It's for) someone who understands the risks and wants to take corrective action in the face of a global pandemic that comes once in a century. It is comfortable to wear a double mask during the winter months and it increases the protection level. Typically, one will wear a basic certified mask on the inside and a 'dressy' mask on the outside. Even though the dressy mask is not adequate by itself to protect the wearer or others, as a double mask it will add to the level of protection," says Barun Aggarwal, CEO, BreatheEasy, a service provider for indoor air quality and energy conservation.

Medical experts and current health guidelines suggest wearing a mask that contains at least two-three layers of fabric and can fit and cover the face well. Delhi-based Gurpreet Sandhu, president, Council for Healthcare and Pharma, a premier thinktank committed to the development of sustainable healthcare systems around the world, feels that as long as one has a good-quality mask, which is made up of multiple layers and fits well, there's no need of donning additional masks. "Layers are always a good option, but the objective can be simply achieved by using a good-quality mask that has multiple layers in it. Using two or three masks in the hope that it will add layers won't really serve better protection. Wearing additional masks can suffocate people and lead to additional woes. The only people who should consider using more than one mask are healthcare workers who face high exposure or those who experience trouble in finding a good-quality mask which doesn't fit well," he says.

Usually, single-layer masks are not as effective in blocking aerosols as their effectiveness lies in the range of around 60%. "Putting a surgical mask under a cloth mask can get you over 91% removal efficiency for air and dust particles. That's also the reason why we see people wearing double masks or do a version of an N95. Wearing your mask correctly is just as important, even while double masking. Your nose needs to be covered, both masks should go over the bridge of the nose and under the chin. Masks should be cleaned and disposed of properly. Surgical masks are only good for one-time use," says Yash Javeri, critical care, anaesthesia and emergency medicine, Regency Superspecialty Hospital, Lucknow.

However, for people not in the healthcare industry, a cotton mask should be adequate as long as it is used properly and covers the nose up to the chin, feels Gurugram-based Arunesh Kumar, senior consultant and head, respiratory medicine/pulmonology, Paras Hospital. "Masks are very important to break transmission. For healthcare workers who come in direct contact with patients, a triple-layered mask topped up with an N95 mask and covered by a facial shield gives adequate protection. Proper use and regular use are key to prevent transmission," says Kumar.

TECH-NOW-LOGY

The auto revolution is here

Traditional automakers and technology-focused companies, like Tesla and Apple, are in the race to rule the future of cars

SHIRA OVIDE

IN THE PAST FEW weeks, conventional cars have been put on the endangered list. The electric car maker Tesla turned its first full-year profit in its history. News broke that Hyundai has been negotiating with Apple to manufacture a driverless car. Startups like Rivian and Lucid are racing ahead with entirely novel ways to make vehicles. And General Motors said that by 2035, it would stop selling gasoline-powered cars. "I've been writing about the auto industry for 19 years, and I've really never seen anything like this," my colleague Neal E Boudette told me. We discussed the future of cars and whether traditional automakers or tech-focused companies, like Tesla and Apple, would rule the next generation of the roads.

Are traditional automakers, like GM, serious about electric vehicles?

GM wouldn't have said that it will stop making internal combustion engines by 2035 unless it were dead serious. Ford and Volkswagen haven't committed to a deadline, but they're spending tens of billions of dollars to develop electric vehicles. These companies are convinced that there will be a tipping point that spells the death of conventional cars.

Electric vehicles, especially in the United States, are a fraction of car sales. Maybe this isn't a tipping point?

The movement toward electric cars could slow down, especially if there are economic downturns or shortages of raw materials. But I don't think that there's any going back now because of climate change and governments' determination to fight it—including in China, the United States, etc.

Put these developments into context for us.

When I saw the GM news, I sat back

THE COMPANIES THAT SUCCEED WILL NEED TO THINK LIKE THE OTHER SIDE. AUTO COMPANIES NEED TO ADAPT THE MINDSET AND EXPERTISE OF TECH FIRMS, AND VICE-VERSA

(Above) Tesla has changed the concept of a car from a mechanical product to software; and (below) startups like Rivian are racing ahead with entirely novel ways to make vehicles

this new car world? Auto companies or tech companies?

It's not either-or. The companies that succeed will need to think like the other side. Auto companies need to adapt the mindset and expertise of tech firms, and vice-versa. The marvel of Tesla is that it completely changed the concept of a car from a mechanical product to software. Instead of a car being something that was made once and didn't change much, Tesla made it like an iPhone. The braking system or transmission can be upgraded and adapted after the car is on the road.

The traditional automakers were slow to catch on, but they may turn out to be very strong competitors to this new mode. And they're good at something that Tesla still isn't: conducting the orchestra of tens of thousands of parts, and assembling them to exacting standards at a rate of one lakh or three lakh cars a year.

What do you make of Apple's vehicle project and its negotiations with Hyundai to manufacture those cars?

It shows that Apple doesn't want to do what Tesla did and build its own car factories and machinery. If it happens, it would be an interesting melding of Apple's expertise and Hyundai's manufacturing skills.

OK, wow. So who will lead

Travel and the art of anticipation

For most people, going on vacation during the pandemic has been the stuff of dreams. But as vaccination becomes a reality, it's time to start nurturing your travel imagination

STEPHANIE ROSENBLUM

FOR MANY OF us, cancelling vacations has become all too familiar. But as people begin to get vaccinated against Covid-19, the prospect of taking a trip seems a little less like a pipe dream. Certainly, it will be a while before vaccines are widely available (and even then we will need to continue certain practices to stop the spread of the virus). However, just thinking about a future getaway can yield surprising benefits.

"Anticipation is such a valuable source of pleasure," said Elizabeth Dunn, a professor in the Department of Psychology at the University of British Columbia, who has studied anticipation and happiness.

I first spoke with Dunn more than a decade ago when I wrote about spending and happiness on the heels of the Great Recession. Recently, I called her again to talk about travel and the art of anticipation in light of the pandemic. The result?

Practical tips from social science on how to cultivate anticipation, what type of trips to take if you want to maximise happiness post-pandemic (the answer may not be what you think), why now may be an excellent time to plan, and how discussing your future adventures can help others who are feeling isolated.

The happiness reset: You don't have to go far

When we begin travelling again after months holed up at home, we will likely experience what Dunn referred to as a "happiness reset"—the result of which may be that even modest, less costly vacations will give us extreme pleasure.

"You can do something pretty simple and it's going to feel fantastic," she said. That's especially good news for the legions of travellers whose incomes have been hurt by the pandemic.

The theory behind why a more low-key trip may be a smart strategy is because at some point (faster than you think), you'll get used to vacationing again.

"The more people travel, the less likely they are to savour each trip," wrote Dunn and Michael Norton, the Harold M Brierley Professor of Business Administration at the Harvard Business School and a member of Harvard's Behavioral Insights Group, in Happy Money: The Science of Happier Spending. Dunn was involved with studies that investigated the notion that "an abundance of desirable life experiences may undermine people's ability to savor simpler pleasures." In the resulting paper, published in Personality and Social Psychology Bulletin in 2015, Dunn and her fellow authors wrote that "being a world traveler—or just feeling like one—may undermine our proclivity to savor visits to enjoyable but unextraordinary destinations."

So, in a sense, our current travel deficit may end up replenishing our wonder of exploring.

To take advantage of a happiness reset, begin with a simpler trip—a beach getaway close to home, a cross-country road trip, a fishing expedition with friends. No need for an extravagant getaway on the other side of the world. Even low-key trips are likely to feel novel after the pandemic. Dunn, for example, said she is planning a vacation with friends to a ranch in her home province of British Columbia when vacation travel there is allowed again.

"The happiness reset won't last forever," she said. "We'll ramp up our expectations again. You might as well take advantage of this moment."

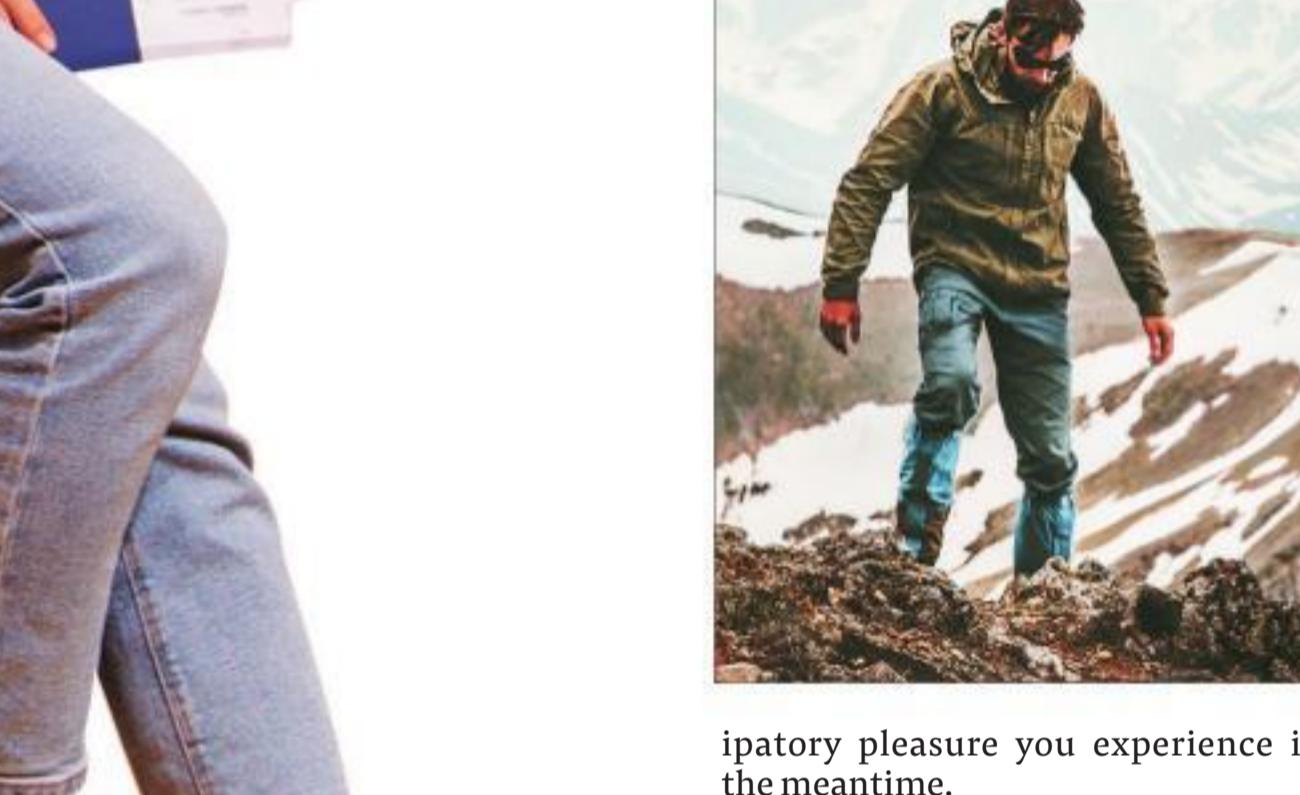

How to cultivate anticipation

Ideally, you want to book a vacation far enough in advance that you have time beforehand to gather details about the destination, to build excitement and positive expectations. This is as true for a trip to a state park as it is for a trip to Sicily. Since you don't know what will happen on a hike, an escape to distant coastal cliffs or an Italian getaway you can use the time beforehand to fantasise, to imagine the Mediterranean Sea, food and sunshine. It's through this cultivation of anticipation that the pleasure of a vacation can be extended beyond the trip itself.

When you don't give yourself enough time to actively anticipate a vacation—to pore over photographs of places you plan to see, read about history, browse things to do (you can discover more ways to cultivate anticipation for travel here)—you miss out on a potent source of pleasure. As the authors of investigations that examined people's anticipation of, experiences in and recollections of, meaningful life events (including a trip to Europe, a Thanksgiving vacation and bicycling in California) wrote in the Journal of Experimental Social Psychology: "people's expectations of personal events are more positive than their actual experience during the event itself."

ipatory pleasure you experience in the meantime.

As Dunn once put it: That's "happi-

Invite others to reminisce

Perhaps the most unexpected benefit of planning your own trip nowadays is that it can give great joy to someone else. Whether you're considering going, Dunn suggests calling a parent or grandparent, for instance, and providing them with an opportunity to reminisce about their own travels. Ask them if they have ever been where you wish to go.

Reminiscing, after all, has been shown to give us a happiness boost. We can do this for ourselves by looking at our old travel diaries or photographs. But we can also give the pleasure of reminiscing to others by inviting them to share their memories—something that may be particularly welcome amid the isolation of the pandemic.

"Creating opportunities for others to reminisce is a really kind thing to do," said Dunn. The planning phase is also an opportunity to virtually gather and touch base with the people you're hoping to travel with someday, be they friends or extended family members. Make your future travel a reason for virtually interacting now, said Dunn, which is what she and her friends are doing in lieu of going out to dinner.

"I think starting to plan a vacation feels like this active step toward hope," she said, "and the end of this terrible time that we've all been in."

Coming soon: The 'vaccine passport'

In the near future, travel may require digital documentation showing that passengers have been vaccinated or tested for the coronavirus

TARIRO MZEZWA

AMONG GOVERNMENTS AND those in the travel industry, a new term has entered the vocabulary: vaccine passport. Denmark's government said that in the next three to four months, it will roll out a digital passport that will allow citizens to show they have been vaccinated. It isn't just governments that are suggesting vaccine passports. In a few weeks, Etihad Airways and Emirates will start using a digital travel pass, developed by the International Air Transport Association, to help passengers manage their travel plans and provide airlines and governments documentation that they have been vaccinated or tested for Covid-19. The challenge right now is creating a document or app that is accepted around the world, that protects privacy and is accessible to people. Here's what we know so far...

What is a vaccine pass?

A vaccination pass or passport is docu-

DENMARK PLANS TO ROLL OUT A DIGITAL PASSPORT THAT WILL ALLOW CITIZENS TO SHOW THEY HAVE BEEN VACCINATED

mentation proving that you have been vaccinated against Covid-19. Some versions will also allow people to show that they have tested negative for the virus, and therefore can more easily travel. The versions being worked on now by airlines, industry groups, non-profits and technology companies will be something you can pull up on your mobile phone as an app or part of your digital wallet.

Why would I need it?

As more people are inoculated, there will likely be aspects of public life in which only people who have been vaccinated are allowed to participate. In order to travel internationally, government and health authorities will need to know if you have been vaccinated or have tested negative for the virus. Many countries are already requiring proof of a negative test for entry. Such passes could be essential to restarting the tourism industry, said Zurab Pololikashvili, secretary general of the United Nations World Tourism Organization.

Does it have to be digital?

Vaccine passports don't have to be digital, but they would make the travel process smoother. "Imagine a future where a plane lands in an airport and a hundred people have a travel pass, 100 have another health wallet, 50 have bits of paper and another 25 have some kind of government document," said Jamie Smith, senior director of business development at Evernym, a developer that has been working with the IATA and others on developing a vaccine pass. "What does the airport do? How do they process all those people in a standard, simple way?"

What are the challenges?

Technologists and experts said that although it is possible to rush tech solutions, creating long-lasting ethical technology or systems that will not store people's data, or make it possible to track where they are, takes time. "The global passport system took 50 years to develop," said Drummond Reed, chief trust officer for Evernym. "Even when they wanted to add biometrics to that to make it stronger, that took over a decade to agree on just how you're going to add a fingerprint or a facial biometric to be verified on a passport. Now, in a very short period of time, we need to produce a digital credential that can be as universally recognised as a passport and it needs an even greater level of privacy because it's going to be digital."

GESTATIONAL DIABETES

Gestational diabetes resembles type 2 diabetes in several respects, involving a combination of relatively inadequate insulin secretion and responsiveness. It occurs in about 2-10% of all pregnancies and may improve or disappear after delivery.

ANAHAD O'CONNOR

A NEW CROP OF DIGITAL health companies is offering consumers an unusual way to transform the way they eat, with the promise of improving metabolic health, boosting energy levels and achieving a personalised road map to better health. Their pitch: Find the foods that are best for you by seeing how they impact your blood sugar levels.

The companies, which include Levels, Nutrisense and January, provide their customers continuous glucose monitors: sleek, wearable devices that attach to your arm and measure your body's glucose levels 24 hours a day, no skin pricks required. The devices transmit that data to your smartphone, allowing you to see in real time how your glucose levels are affected by your diet, sleep, exercise and stress levels.

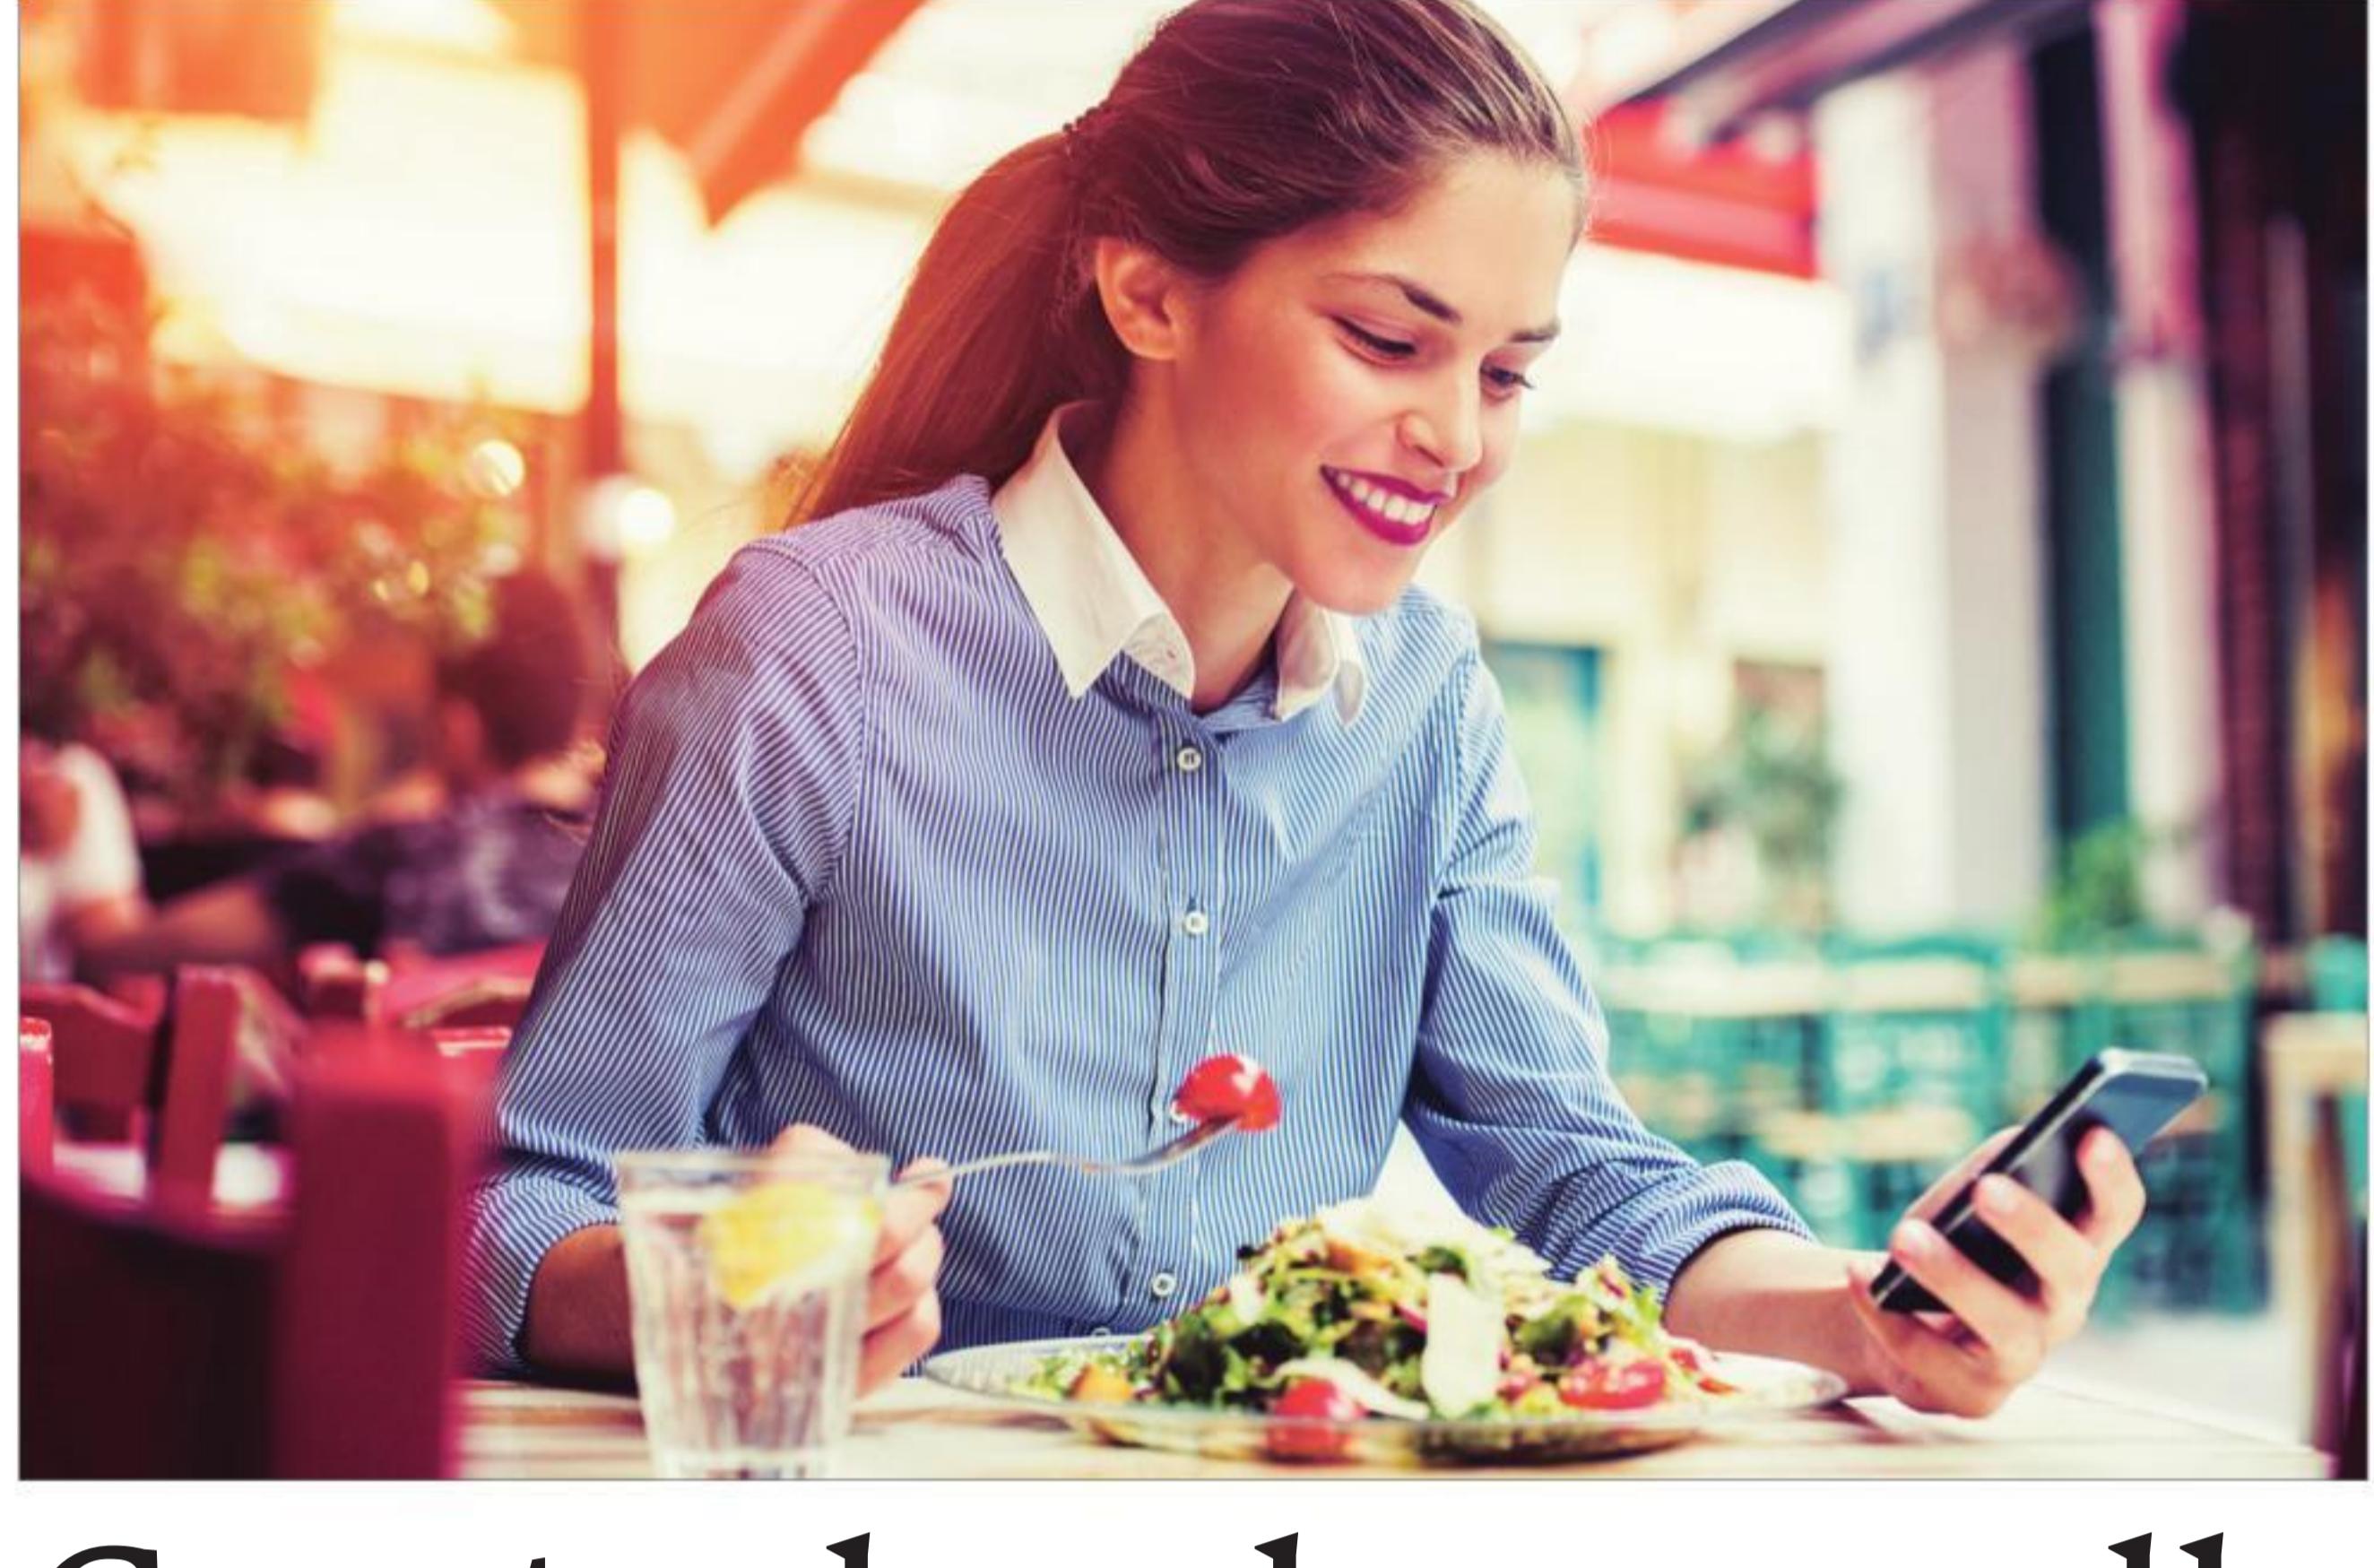

The devices can show users in real time which of their favourite foods and snacks can make their blood sugar levels spike and crash, leaving them feeling tired and sluggish after meals. They can reveal how engaging in regular exercise, or simply going for a short walk after a big meal, helps to improve blood sugar control. And for some people, the devices can provide warning signs that they may be at increased risk of developing Type 2 diabetes and other forms of metabolic disease.

Continuous glucose monitors were originally developed decades ago to help people with diabetes manage their blood sugar. For people with Type 1 diabetes, the devices, which require a doctor's prescription, are considered the standard of care, freeing them from the burden of having to prick their fingers multiple times a day to check their blood sugar. But now digital health companies are using the devices to market programmes that tap into the growing demand for personalised nutrition, a multibillion-dollar industry.

"We've had trackers for many other things like sleep, stress and fitness," said Casey Means, a surgeon who co-founded Levels and serves as its chief medical officer. "But a continuous glucose monitor measures an internal biomarker like a tiny lab on our arms. This is the first time it's been used for a mainstream population for the specific purpose of making lifestyle decisions."

While most people know that eating sugary junk foods like cookies, cake and soda can wreak havoc on their blood sugar levels, studies show that people can have a wide range of responses to many foods. In one intriguing study from 2015, researchers in Israel followed 800 adults for a week, using continuous glucose monitors to track their glucose levels. They found that even when people ate identical foods, such as bread and butter or chocolate, some people had substantial blood sugar spikes while others did not. The researchers concluded that a variety of factors unique to every person, such as weight, genetics, gut microbiome, lifestyle and insulin sensitivity, determine how you respond to different foods.

In general, health authorities consider a healthy fasting blood sugar level, measured after an overnight fast, to be below 100 milligrams per deciliter. It is normal for blood sugar to rise after meals. But in a 2018 study, researchers at Stanford found that when they had 57 adults wear continuous glucose monitors for two weeks, many people considered "healthy" by normal standards saw their blood sugar soar to diabetic levels on frequent occasions, a signal that they might be on the road to developing Type 2 diabetes. Other research shows that such large blood sugar swings are linked to heart disease and chronic inflammation, which is

Can technology really help us eat better?

A new crop of digital health companies is using blood glucose monitors to transform the way we eat increasingly thought to underlie a wide range of age-related ailments, from heart disease, diabetes and cancer to arthritis, depression and dementia.

"The nice thing about using a CGM is that it's an early way of catching what's going on, and it gives you a chance to change your behaviour before you're diabetic," said Michael Snyder, a senior author of the 2018 study and a professor in genetics at Stanford.

Nationwide, about 88 million adults, or more than one in three Americans, have pre-diabetes, a precursor to Type 2 diabetes that causes chronically high blood sugar levels. But according to the federal government, more than 84% of people with the condition do not know that they have it.

Snyder's research led him to co-found January. The company provides its customers with continuous glucose monitors and then uses artificial intelligence to help them make decisions about what to eat, including predictions about how they might react to different foods before they even eat them.

The programmes, which are not covered by insurance, are not cheap. The starting price for Levels is $395, which includes a telemedicine consultation and two Abbott FreeStyle Libre glucose monitors that are programmed to run for 14 days each. Nutrisense offers its customers a variety of packages that range in price from $175 for a two-week program to $160 a month for an 18-month commitment. And January charges $288 for its "Season of Me" introductory programme that includes two glucose monitors, a heart rate monitor, and access to the company's app for three months.

But are they worth it?

To get a better sense, I signed up to use the Levels programme for one month. As a health reporter who writes about nutrition, I try to follow a fairly healthy diet and exercise regimen with plenty of fresh foods and few junk foods or sugary snacks, so I wasn't expecting to learn much from the programme. But I kept an open mind.

To get started, I filled out a brief health questionnaire online. Then Levels shipped me two FreeStyle Libre glucose monitors, which were prescribed by a doctor affiliated with the company. As instructed, I attached the device, a small patch with a tiny sensor about the size of a human hair, to the back of my arm. The sensor measures "interstitial fluid" beneath the skin, which it uses to estimate blood sugar levels.

The monitor helped me identify foods that I had no idea were spiking my blood sugar, like protein bars and chickpea pasta. But through trial and error, it also helped me find alternatives. One day I ate a salad with grilled salmon and noticed that it caused my blood sugar to soar. I soon realised why: I had drenched my salad in balsamic vinegar, which, it turns out, contains a lot of sugar. The next day I repeated the meal but with red wine vinegar, which contains no sugar. The result? My continuous glucose monitor showed there was no blood sugar spike or crash.

Means said that people are often surprised to learn just how much sugar is hiding in their foods, especially in things like sauces, condiments and dressings. But not everyone is the same, and people learn tricks, such as pairing carbs with protein or fats, for example, by adding almond butter to oatmeal or an apple, to blunt the blood sugar response to certain foods.

The monitor also reinforced the value of exercise. I noticed on days when I went for a run, or even a 15-minute walk, that the physical activity helped to keep my blood sugar in a steady range after meals.

I reached out to Aaron Neinstein, an endocrinologist at the University of California, San Francisco. Neinstein prescribes continuous glucose monitors to most of his patients with diabetes and has used them himself to monitor his blood sugar and make changes to his diet. By wearing a CGM he found, for example, that a particular type of soup that he regularly ate at his hospital cafeteria was causing a "surprisingly sustained elevation" in his blood sugar levels, leading him to cut back on it.

Neinstein said there was evidence from rigorous studies that wearing a CGM benefits people with Type 1 diabetes, leading to improved blood sugar control. He predicted that by 2025 every person with any form of diabetes would be using a CGM. But he said he hoped there would be more research looking into whether they can improve health in people without diabetes before they become more widely adopted by the general public.

"Anecdotally, I have seen it have benefit in people without diabetes," he said. "But I think it's really important that it be rigorously tested. It's an expense to people and to the health care system, so we really do need to have evidence of benefit." Neinstein said he encourages people who try programmes like Levels to treat their glucose devices as part of a personal science experiment.

"There is so much unhealthy food all around us, and we're in an epidemic of metabolic disease," he said. "If people can use these devices to test different foods and get a little feedback on what are the behaviors that are making them less healthy, then that seems like a valuable thing to me."

How to exercise in the cold

Cold weather workouts do bring unique risks, but a little planning can help

KELLY DINARDO

THE SHIFT TO COLDER weather makes hibernating under a pile of blankets, perhaps while binge-watching favourite shows, quite tempting. But outdoor exercise is a great way to improve energy levels, boost the immune system, connect with nature and, during the coronavirus pandemic, safely socialise with people outside your bubble. But an outdoor exercise routine during the winter does bring unique risks. Cold temperatures cause blood vessels to narrow, making it harder for the heart to pump blood and potentially straining the heart. This narrowing of blood vessels can also keep muscles from getting the oxygen they need to stay warm and flexible, which can lead to injury. Hypothermia, frostbite and falls on icy ground are also hazards of winter weather.

A little planning and preparation can mitigate the risk whether you're going for a winter walk, trekking in snowshoes or sledding with the children. Here's what you need to know to feel the burn and the "brrr."

Before you head out

The body has two main types of adipose tissue or fat: white and brown. Unlike standard white fat, which stores calories, brown fat is packed with energy-creating mitochondria that produces heat and helps the body maintain its core temperature when it's cold out. This is the type of fat hibernating animals use to stay warm. "Essential fatty acids like omega-3s, DHA and EPA can help increase the amount of brown fat," said Shawn Stevenson, the nutritionist and author of the book Eat Smarter. "You'll find that in salmon, roe, egg yolks and algae or krill oil. There's no need to go crazy, but two to three servings a week can help during the cold time of year."

Cold temperatures cause physiological shifts that diminish the body's thirst response and increase water loss through respiration and urination (yes, you really do urinate more in the winter). "Staying hydrated isn't as intuitive as it is during the summer, when sweat is pouring off you," said Sophie Caldwell Hamilton, a cross-country skier and two-time Olympian. "For me it starts first thing in the morning. For every cup of coffee I have, I have a cup of water. When I'm skiing, I have a drink belt with warm water and a Nuun electrolyte tablet in it."

Dress dry, not just warm. Water moves heat away from the body, leaving you cold and increasing your risk for hypothermia. When you are heading out, start with a base layer made of merino wool, polypropylene or material that will wick away water and sweat. This includes glove liners, socks and hats, which can get wet with sweat and freeze. Next, add a slightly thicker layer made of fleece or light wool and top it off with something that breaks the wind. Sunglasses or goggles and a buff, neckwear that can be pulled up over the mouth and nose, help protect the face.

While outside

When exercising in cold temperatures, your muscles are not as pliable and are at increased risk for injury and strain. The cold air also causes the upper airway to narrow making it harder to breathe. Breathing through the nose and covering the nose and mouth with a scarf or mask can warm the air before it reaches the lower airway. But both the muscles and the lungs need to warm up for at least 10 to 15 minutes.

Eichten, who has also completed over 10 Birkies, a 50-kilometer cross-country race formally known as the American Birkebeiner, suggests moving at a slower pace of whatever activity you are planning to do and then adding in some dynamic stretches like arm circles, lunges and hip circles. "You also need to let your breathing slow down before you go back into the warm air," Eichten said. "Your lungs need to adjust to a normal breathing rate or you can induce a cough or spasm."

It's important to stay on top of your fuel, hydration and clothing while you're out. If you're going to be active for more than 45 minutes, think about how you can fuel your body along the way. Eichten suggests a simple carbohydrate like a granola bar or an electrolyte drink. You can also easily lose one to two liters of water while out, so bring water with you, be conscious of your activity level and take water breaks.

Be sure to adjust your clothing as necessary. "You want to stay warm, but you don't want to get too sweaty," Hamilton said. "As the intensity ratchets up, take off layers and then add them back on as I start to cool down."

The mushrooms will survive us

In our ruined global moment, watching something busily transform trash into fleshy, sculptural fruit is a comfort

ZOË SCHLANGER

IT HAPPENED FASTER than seemed right. One day, the tiny grey pinheads of mushrooms were just beginning to emerge from a two-inch cut in a bag of sawdust; the next, they were huge, scalloped hand-like lobes. They looked practically in motion, like muscular forearms reaching out of a wormhole. It was early summer and I was growing blue oyster mushrooms on my kitchen counter. It was more dramatic than I could have imagined.

It started out benignly enough. About two months into lockdown, the ecology of my Instagram feed began to shift away from sourdough bread and toward mushroom grow kits. These kits are blocks of compressed waste from sawmills, which have been implanted with the mycelium of wood-eating fungi. (Mycelium are the fine, hairlike tendrils that are the principal part of any fungus; mushrooms are merely the fruiting parts, similar to apples on a tree.)

The mycelium, delighted to find themselves nested in a cocoon of their favourite food, grow threads, digesting sawdust as they go, probing for a bit of air and moisture, which they cannot find, because the blocks are encased in plastic bags. That is where the fungal gardener comes in: if you cut an X in the plastic and spritz that X with water a few times a day, the mycelium will find their way to that spot, communicating across their many tendrils to coalesce into solid flesh, and will burst forth as mushrooms.

Sacks of sawdust filled my friends' counters, each frothing over with bulbous lion's mane or disgorging scaly oyster mushrooms. The kits for growing pink oysters, which emerge as a cascade of salmon shingles, were particularly photogenic. I called two mushroom farms that had supplied the bulk of my friends' kits and learned business was booming. "It's been a very steep increase in sales," said Matt McInnis, one of the founders of North Spore, in Portland, Maine, which was started in 2014 by three friends who went mushroom foraging together in college. Sales of introductory mushroom growing supplies had increased 400% during the pandemic over the previous spring, he said.

Smallhold, a farm in Brooklyn that had previously supplied restaurants with mushrooms and installed mini mushroom farms in commercial kitchens, also had a spike when it pivoted to at-home mushroom kits as restaurant orders dried up, the farm said. Customers tagged Smallhold in endless posts of sculptural mushroom clusters that emerged, somehow, nearly overnight. "Mushrooms are mysterious and ephemeral," Andrew Carter, 35, a founder of Smallhold, had warned me before I took my kits home. He said they were more like growing animals than plants, but not quite that either; after all, fungi are a kingdom of life all their own.

"They may not look like anything for a while and then all of a sudden there's mushrooms," he said. "It's unlike anything people have seen."

Trendy Trash Monsters

Across Asia, mushrooms have long been prized, for food and flavour, medicinal and ritualistic purposes, and in poetry and prose. Rich mushroom foraging traditions have been passed down for centuries in several parts of Europe as well, where going to a forest on the weekend to pick mushrooms is still a common family outing. In France, virtually every town has its own mushroom expert, trained by the government.

Colonisers brought these traditions to the Americas, where Native American people had also been eating foraged mushrooms forever. In regions like Appalachia, wild mushroom hunting remains part of the rural foodways.

And while urbanites tending mushrooms in cramped apartment kitchens may seem a far leap from those traditions, their interest in fungi is a small component of a global passion. Mushroom import and export is an enormous worldwide business, with the mushroom market expected to reach $8.6 billion by 2025, according to the market research company IMARC.

That passion may also have to do with new applications of mycelium, and novel research into its seeming world-saving potential. Fungi thrive on waste and decay. They are, in essence, trash monsters, making value out of chaos. "Mushrooms are decomposers," McInnis, 33, said. "If you provide them with an opportunity to consume something they will." And they'll do it fast: Crops of mushrooms are known to emerge fully formed overnight, sometimes pushing up unthinkably heavy loads of earth and pavement in the process. No one yet knows how it is possible for a soft thing to heave so much.

Beyond decomposing dead organisms (like rotting trees, or waste from sawmills, as is the case with the at-home kits), they can infiltrate almost anything, chewing through rock, plastic and even radioactive materials. Some species have shown promise in cleaning up environmental waste sites, happily digesting toxins and blooming into benign fruit.

There is renewed scientific investment into many compounds found in mushrooms, including psilocybin, which has shown promise for treating depression in clinical trials. Lion's mane, an edible (and non-psychotropic) mushroom, is believed by many consumers to be good for the brain, and a study published in 2011 showed the mushroom reduced memory loss symptoms in mice.

It remains to be seen if those results could translate to humans, but one study in older people found that daily lion's mane supplements improved their mental functioning. ("Lion's mane is having a real moment right now," McInnis said. "It's our best seller.") In a world where the construction industry produces more than one-tenth of all greenhouse gases, fungi may become a sustainable building material; mycelium grows obscenely quickly and can be coaxed to take the shape of architectural moulds. So far, tinkering researchers have managed to guide it into the form of compostable bricks and rather organic-looking chairs. Some fashion designers are also experimenting with mushroom leather.

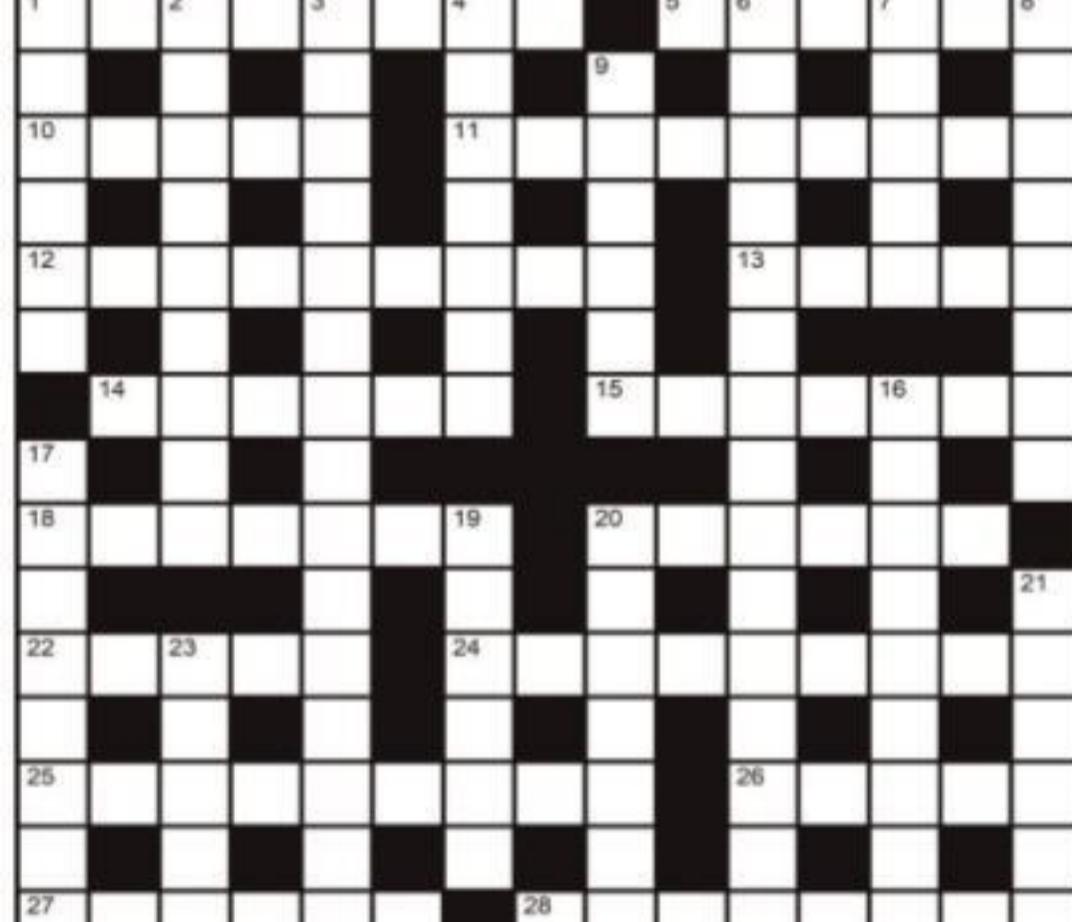

In the late 1990s, the biologist Suzanne Simard published a paper detailing how trees in a forest can exchange nutrients by way of underground mycelium. Since then, researchers have found that fungi so thoroughly infiltrate the roots of most every plant in the wild that they are inextricable from the plants themselves. They serve as brokers of vital nutrients, and in some cases may be responsible for the very traits that define the plant species, like the sweetness of a tomato or the ability of a coastal grass to tolerate salty water. Some research suggests fungi entwined in tree roots may even serve as information highways, passing information about threats between trees.

The possibilities feel endless, and provoke a certain mysticism in the mycologically minded: "The more you talk about mushrooms, the more you want to talk about mushrooms," said Carter, of Smallhold, grinning a little. "Some people think that's by design, as a way to spread their spores." A 2008 TED Talk by the renowned mycologist Paul Stamets, on the properties of mushrooms, has been viewed nearly three million times. In 2015, Anna Tsing published The Mushroom at the End of the World, which contemplates fungi's role in the ruins of capitalism; it proved to be a rare academic book that managed to cross over into the popular market. More recently, the documentary Fantastic Fungi, released in 2019, espoused the wonders of the below-ground fungal kingdom normally hidden from view. It was narrated by the actress Brie Larson, embodying the role of an omniscient mushroom.

The sudden interest in at-home mycology, specifically, seems to have a particular resonance with our times. In our ruined global moment, watching something busily transform trash into fleshy, sculptural, delicious fruit is a comfort, so it's little wonder they've become popular in a pandemic.

6-4; BID MORE, PART II

We continue with our discussion on 6-4; bid more. The setting is IMPs as last week. With both sides vulnerable, you pick up S J-2 H A-8-7-6-5-4 D 3 C A-T-6-2, as south. East opens 1D in the first seat. You overall 1H. West raises his partner to 2D. Your partner, sitting north, bids 3D to show a useful hand with fit for your suit. East passes. With two crisp aces in hand and 6-4, you decide to shoot it out at 4H. The complete hands are:

Dlr: East	S K QT 6 4	West	-	North	-	East	South
Vul: Both	H K 3	-	-	1D	1H
	D Q 8 5	2D	3D	pass	4H
S A 8
H Q T 2
D 9 7 6 2
C 9 7 5 4
N	S 9 7 5 3
	H J 9
	D A K J T 4
	C Q J
S J 2
H A 8 7 6 5 4
D 3
C A T 6 2

Contract: 4H by south. West leads the D2. Plan the play.

Play: Strictly, there is nothing to play here. East won the first trick with the ten and continued with the diamond ace. Declarer ruffed the diamond continuation, cashed the king and the ace of hearts and played a third heart. West won and shifted to a club. Declarer won in hand and tabled the spade jack. West won and played a second club, declarer claiming the balance.

Discussion: instead of 3D, a bid of 2S would have been nebulous. My partner, Leela, treated the high honour in her hand (K-x) as a three-card support for my overcall and came up with the excellent bid of 3D which made me go the distance and bid game!

Most players didn't evaluate the potential of their hand and were content to bid 3H. Though minimum in terms of high cards, it should be judged as splendid minimum, offering good playing strength. We scored six IMPs on the board, for the majority had stopped in 3H and some of them played in 3S, going one down.

Sitharaman hints at more reforms

Demand for the NREGS soared this fiscal, thanks to the pandemic that forced millions of migrant workers to go back home where many of them tapped the scheme to eke out a living. The minister said while the Congress-led UPA brought in the NREGS, it didn't spend even the budgeted amount on the scheme year after year. For instance, even after the global financial crisis, the offtake under the NREGS stood at ₹33,539 crore in FY09, against the budget estimate (BE) of ₹39,100 crore. In contrast, the NDA government's actual spending on the scheme has topped its budget estimate every year, she asserted.

The government has budgeted capital expenditure at ₹5.45 lakh crore for FY22, which is 26.2% higher than the RE of FY21 and 34.5% larger than the budget estimate (BE) for this fiscal, as it sought to invest in productive assets to spur growth.

From the Front Page

The International Monetary Fund has forecast a 11.5% real GDP expansion for India in FY22 and 6.8% in FY23. With this, India is set to return as the world's fastest-growing major economy, beating China. Responding to the Congress-led opposition's accusation of crony capitalism, Sitharaman listed out a raft of measures — from the supply of free grains and cooking gas to the poor in the wake of the pandemic to the construction of rural houses and guaranteed loans — to suggest the government, in fact, has been working for the poor, the middle class and even small businesses. At the same time, this government doesn't hesitate to acknowledge the contribution of wealth creators to nation building. Unless business creates wealth, the government has nothing to distribute to the poor and migrant labourers, Sitharaman said. Commenting on the PM Kisan scheme, the minister said the decline in the budgetary allocation for FY22 by ₹10,000 crore (from the BE of this fiscal) was because of 'rationalisation' of expenditure, as West Bengal government didn't share the list of 69 lakh beneficiaries with the Centre.

Not only sedan, compact sedans also lose speed

As per Society of Indian Automobile Manufacturers (SIAM) data and company reports, sales of sub-4 metre sedans witnessed steep fall with VW discontinuing the Ameo

(2016-20) and Hyundai replacing the Xcent with the Aura (in the PV segment). Rajeev Singh, partner & automotive leader, Deloitte India, says SUVs have crowded out sedans across segments. "An SUV looks more muscular, and offers more cabin space and almost similar boot space as a sedan. Indian consumer puts a premium to the space inside a car," he says. "Consumers have also realised that SUVs are better suited to Indian road conditions (which are still a work in progress), because these have higher ground clearance."

Som Kapoor, partner, automotive sector, EY India, says the 'crowding out' is especially apparent in the sub-4 metre space. "There are 10-odd sub-4 metre SUV models in India, compared to just five sub-4 metres," he says.

Kapoor attributes two more reasons for this shift. "One, we saw during the pandemic that sales of pre-owned cars shot up, and it could be a possibility that a section of buyers, instead of buying a new sub-4 metre sedan, shifted to pre-owned bigger SUVs available at more or less similar price. Two, a new body shape always excites consumers. Over the years a sub-4 metre sedan was the most common car seen on Indian roads, and when consumers got choice in a different body shape, they moved." Sanjeev Garg, practice leader, automotive, Praxis Global Alliance, says that in addition to SUVs, even premium hatchbacks are eating into sedan sales. "In the end it boils down to choice," Garg says.

"Between 2016 and now, 8-9 new sub-4 metre SUVs/crossovers as well as many premium hatchbacks have been launched; consumers have a lot of choice." The five sub-4 metre sedan models available in India could be the last of such cars globally; currently, no carmaker is known to develop a new sub-4 metre sedan.

"Even if a carmaker is developing one, it will have to re-evaluate its strategy or delay the product," says Gaurav Vangaal, associate director, IHS Markit.

₹3,948.45 crore. The Ebitda margin also improved to 39.3% in the October-December quarter as compared to 38.5% in the preceding quarter.

The company said launching of unified brand Vi has started to yield results and various subscriber KPIs (key performance indicators) have shown improvement. The subscriber churn has come down to 2.3% as compared to 2.6% in the preceding quarter. The total subscribers of the company stood at 269.8 million in Q3 against 271.8 million in Q2, a decline of 2 million. The company had lost 8.1 million subscribers in Q2. The average revenue per user (Arpu) improved to ₹121 for the reported period as compared to ₹119 in the preceding quarter.

The Arpu though remains much lower than Bharti Airtel and Reliance Jio. Other operating metrics like data usage was also lower than competition. Vodafone Idea's average data consumption per user per month stood at 12.2 GB, lower than 12.9 GB of Jio and 16.7 GB of Airtel. At the end of the quarter, the 4G subscriber base stood at 109.7 million (vs 106.1 million in Q2), an increase of 3.6 million in the period. The data volumes grew by 3.4% QoQ, driven by higher 4G additions. Total minutes on the network declined by 1.5% during the period compared to 4% decline in the preceding Q2 period.

In Q3 FY21, we improved subscriber retention and operating performance...we remained focused on executing our strategy and cost optimisation plan remains on track to deliver the targeted savings. The board has approved funds raising to support our strategic intent and we are in active discussions with potential investors," Ravinder Takkar, MD and CEO of Vodafone Idea said.

ONGC profit falls 31%

The company's revenue stood at ₹10,894.1 crore for the period, just about a per cent higher than ₹10,791.2 crore in the preceding quarter. It was though lower than estimates of ₹10,993.28 crore. The Ebitda increased by 3.22% to ₹4,286.2 crore against ₹4,152.4 crore in the preceding quarter. It was higher than estimates of

The company, which produces about 65% of domestic crude oil, supplied 5.6 million tonne (MT) of crude oil in the quarter from its ageing oil-fields, recording an annual drop of 3.3%. Its natural gas output fell 5.9% year-on-year (y-o-y) to 5.8 billion cubic metres. ONGC's realisation from crude oil from its nominated fields fell 27.7% to $43.2 per barrel during the December quarter, compared with the year-ago period. Gross revenue was down 8.4% y-o-y to ₹11 lakh crore in the quarter.

The upcoming subsidiary will focus on the gas business value chain, including LNG, hydrogen enriched CNG, ONGC said. The company will also help ONGC diversify further into the gas to power, bioenergy, and other bio fuel business fronts. ONGC will also acquire 5% stake in IGX, the country's maiden and only gas exchange.

The move towards diversification comes at a time when the company is not able to sell its produce at viable rates. The company has made numerous representations to the government about the stress faced due to low gas prices.

Messiah Sonu Sood darling of brands too

This resulted in a huge surge in his personal brand value, especially among blue-collar workers," says Sandeep Goyal, founder and chairman, Mogae Media. And it is this off-screen persona of Sood that has appealed to bands. "Today, Sonu is not only a Bollywood actor but a social worker who champions the cause of a positive change," says Muralikrishnan B, chief operating officer, Mi India. The smartphone brand has associated with Sood to launch its Redmi 9 Power and Shiksha Haath, a campaign to donate Redmi smartphones.

Acer is now endorsed by Sood. The brand's marketing head, Sooraj Balakrishnan says that now audiences are not just swayed by the popularity of a celebrity in 'real' life but also for what the celebrity stands for in their real life. "Stars like Amitabh Bachchan or Virat Kohli ensure recognition for a brand whereas relatable celebrities like Sood or even Ayushmann Khurrana can guarantee a purchase because they can be emulated," notes Goyal. Sood is said to be charging about ₹1-2 crore per endorsement. And those brands that have smaller budgets are hiring him to do social media posts alone. Can Sood continue to be the first choice for a brand looking for a relatable face one year from now when the news-cycle has moved on? Neel Gogia, co-founder, IPLIX Media, says that he will need to maintain his humanitarian efforts and stay in the news for similar causes if he wishes to continue to bag similar endorsement deals.
